WHAT NEW YORKERS ARE DISCUSSING JUST NOW.

The Coming Contest Between American and English Canoeists in American Waters—George Gould to Wed an English Lady—The Political Outlook in New York City, Etc.

NEW YORK, June 26.—[Special.]—The spreading wings of the big single stick yachts have overshadowed an event which promises to be of special interest to quite as many Corinthian sailors as are specially interested in the forthcoming contests between English cutter and yankee sloop. A large number of ingenious men of leisure on both sides of the water have been spending their winters devising and their summers testing all sorts of of contrivances for bringing the canoe as near to perfection as possible. From a thing of birch bark, propelled with rude paddles, the canoe has become a creation of polished white cedar and mahogany, butterfly wings, burnished nickel-drop rudders, jam cleats, cane cleats, brass folding center-boards, and that sort of thing. The canoe of today has something of the shape of an ocean steamship, but vastly finer lines. Under full sail, with main sail set and clearly drawing, with flags and pennants flying, and with the wind making music in her braided cordage, the canoe of 1886 has a very important look. It is the belief on this side of the ocean that the American canoe is a little nearer perfection than the English, and in England this belief is set down as a yankee delusion; so the matter is to be brought to a test in the contest this summer in American waters. A few surprises are in store for the English canoeists who are coming to our shores. At least two of the most successful prize winners in these waters have something new, which they will bring to light in time for the international matches, and which, they think, will keep the Englishmen from carrying away all the prizes in the sailing contests. One of the canoeists referred to is a member of the Mohican club of Albany, and the other sails his miniature ship in New York harbor.

Couldn't Stand the Separation.

NEW YORK, June 26.—[Special.]—The report that Geo. Gould, the eldest son of Jay Gould, has gone to London to wed Miss Edith Kingdom, an actress, excites a wider range of interest than would be the case if the thing concerned any other man in New York. That is because the world of fashion, the world of finance and the world of theatricals are all perturbed by the rumor. The certainties of the matter may be quickly stated. Mr. Gould and Miss Kingdom were for six months indubitably sentimental companions. They were to be seen on horseback together in Central park nearly every pleasant morning. They frequently lunched at modish restaurants in the afternoons. Whenever she was unemployed on the stage in the evening, they usually went to some public place of amusement, and especially the opera. Several times they sat in Jay Gould's proprietary box at the Metropolitan opera house, though never when others of the Gould family were there. When she was on dramatic duty, his cab frequently waited for her at the stage door, and a late supper prefaced her retirement to her home. Miss Kingdom declared that she was betrothed to George Gould, and to her fellow actors showed a ring which she said was a pledge of the engagement. At one time the distinction seemed to threaten to destroy her usefulness in Daly's company, of which she was a minor member, and the manager had to put her under rigid discipline. This was the more necessary because she was then enacting a role so cleverly that the newspaper critics were praising her. George's attentions were so strong and enduring—for she was not the first pretty actress to whom he had paid court—that the story of a forthcoming marriage gained belief—the more so as he would not deny it.

The Daly company went to London in May. Immediately after their arrival in the British metropolis, the heaviest private correspondence ever conveyed by ocean cable began between George Gould and Edith Kingdom. Intense competition has lowered the cable tariff temporarily, and George Gould's cash allowance from his father is said to be twenty-five thousand a year; but it is improbable that the couple would have exchanged daily telegrams of a thousand words each had not George held a deadhead frank. These cabled love letters, if such they were, are of course inviolate. The intimation is that they were written in cypher anyhow. This lasted until the sudden announcement that George had started for London. He said that urgent business connected with Western Union securities held abroad made an unexpected and imperative errand for him. He sailed in the Etrutria, along with Henry Ward Beecher, and should arrive in Liverpool today, in time to meet Miss Kingdom for Sunday. News of his marriage, however, is not expected by those who know him best.

Miss Kingdom is just a quarter of a century old. She is a decided brunette, with handsome features of rather an aggressive expression. Her wit and vivacity are remarkable. She came from Boston where she was an elocutionist before making her debut, four years ago, at the Boston theater. She is well educated, she commands a fashionable style of dress and manner, and, while seemingly not destined to ever accomplish great things as an actress, she might grace a Fifth avenue mansion as the wife of a multible-millionaire.

The Political Outlook.

NEW YORK, June 26.—[Special.]—Ominous clouds are gathering on the political horizon. It is beginning to be believed that the district attorney is holding over the trials of the indictments against the Broadway railroad thieves so as to use them as a lever in the fall election. By a deft manipulation of these indictments Mr. Martine might wield a powerful influence in the choice of a successor to Mayor Grace. He evidently feels that he holds the key to the situation, and at the proper time he probably intends to use it. The prospect for a strong citizen's movement are poor. One was launched under cover of the names of a few respectable merchants and tax payers six weeks ago, but it has been swamped by a swarm of light-waisted politicians who crowded into the shallop, and insisted upon steering it, and trimming its sails. The last meeting of the committee was productive of a laughable result. Taking advantage of a slim attendance, some wag introduced a resolution debarring its members from becoming candidates for office at the approaching election. It was carried with a rush. The lightwaisted fellows are now deserting the ship, and are trying to secure tickets by the regular lines, while the few monied fogies left in the committee remain inert and inactive. The whole thing seems to be an effort to engraft mugwumpism in local politics, and it is evidently doomed to failure. This leaves the fight for the control of the thirty odd millions raised by taxation every year, between the county democrats, the Tammany men and the republicans. The conviction of Jachne terribly demoralized the county democracy. The facts brought out by Roscoe Conkling and Clarence Seward at a cost of over $100,000 could not be hidden. In his own defense the county democracy's district attorney was forced to send the county democracy's leading alderman to state prison. Meantime the organization was almost disemboweled by the action of its mayor. Grace spread his patronage for his own personal benefit, and not for the good of his faction. He quarreled with Purroy, the barras of the party, and he tumbled an excise board, worked in its interests, into oblivion, selecting one in its place that was devoted entirely to its personal interests. But the most damaging work of Grace was his quarrel with Rollin H. Squire, the commissioner of public works. Both were county democrats. The quarrel seems to have had its origin in the immortal couplet written by Squire and exhibited in large letters on the facade of the city hall just before Grant's funeral. The newspapers lampooned the verse so unmercifully that Grace sent word to Squire to instantly remove it, or he himself would order it torn down. The row developed into a first-class fight. A month ago Squire erected a guillotine, and from that day to this heads have been rolling into the basket. The department of public works, with its immense patronage, has been transferred to Tammany hall. The county democracy seems moribund. The only indication of an effort to revive it is found in the customhouse. It looks spasmodic. The collector is turning out a few of the republican employes, and is appointing in their places none but tried county democrats. The entire patronage of the customhouse, however, would hardly balance the loss in the department of public works.

The vigor of the Tammany organization affords a remarkable contrast to the inertia of the county democracy. The leaders of the assembly district organizations meet in conclave weekly, and pull together. Tammany was never in better condition for a fight. Backed by the governor at Albany, and in possession of the register's, county clerk's and sheriff's offices and the department of public works, it will bid defiance to almost any combination against it. A fusing of the citizens' association with the county democrats and the republicans would amount to little, for the republicans themselves are split into irreconciliable clans. The white chokers are fighting the short hairs to the death. George Bliss, as the representative of the former, has accused John O'Brien, the chief of the latter, with getting away with $50,000 of Jay Gould's campaign money in the last presidential election. Of course, O'Brien denies it, and keeps a firm grip on the handle of the republican machine. If Bliss and his white chokers join with the citizen fogies and the county democrats in making a municipal ticket, you may be sure that O'Brien and his short-hairs will stand them off by a deal with Tammany. When the storm does come, somebody will get wet to the skin. Tammany now seems to have much the strongest umbrella.

ZISKA.

Theatrical Events.

NEW YORK, June 26.—[Special.]—An interesting theatrical event to the philosopher, if not to the public, was the arrival here on Monday night of Miss Pauline Markham, in what is technically called "legitimate drama," but, strictly speaking, is dime museum diverson. The event showed how upheme ral is stage representation when not built upon ability. Markham was at one time the best sung, the most widely admired, and the most recklessly flattered woman in America. She it is of whom the Shakespearean scholar, Mr. Richard Grant White, wrote his best rhetoric. He called her voice "vocal velvet." He said she had restored the lost arms of the Venus of Milo (to whom she restored them he didn't say). Attired only in his English undefiled, she walked the boards of Niblo's Garden for several seasons a thing of beauty—but, alas! as there has shown, not a joy forever.

I recall now, as I look at her in womanly skirts trying to do the drama, how the sensuous town went mad over her Pagan magnificence. One well known artist offered her an enormous sum to stand for him as Godiva. Managers saw a fortune in her if she would only play Mazeppa on a horse. Wealthy roues and elegant men of the town stood en queue at her hotel door. One of our big clubs installed her as their Paphian Venus and worshipped her full length photograph. She sat in state when not exhibiting her superb limbs, and measured out her smiles to swarms of admirers.

It is difficult to get the town to look at her now. She opened her engagement at the Third avenue theater in Tom Taylor's "Ticket-of leave Man." There was a very slim house of apathetic people who probably never heard of her. The name in big letters, "Pauline Markham," had no longer a thrill in it. A matronly woman came on and played in the most conventional manner. Here and there in the parquet were bald-headed men who tried to fan the fire of the past out of the ashes of the present, and failed. Markham is still a superb woman in the Pagan sense. Her very step is like the Roman goddess. Her bursting figure is the affluence of vital infinity. But she can't act. She never could. Her vocal velvet has lost its pile. "The lost arms" are there, and the other limbs that were never lost, but alas! of what use are they in draped melodrama?

If the actresses of New York had a bit of moral pluck they would rise up and call upon Markham to give a professional matinee, and then they would buy and distribute tickets among all the young men, so that they might go and see once for all how futile is beauty of form and sensuous praise to preserve a woman's success on the stage.

I once heard a very beautiful woman who thought she could act say to Mr. Harry Palmer that she intended to become a Charlotte Cushman.

"Then," said the remorseless manager, "you'll have to use vitrol on your face instead of rouge." This was the neatest mixture of philosophy and compliment I ever heard. Put into plain English it means that personal beauty is a bar to permanent success.

Dime museum theatricals are gnawing away the best elements of melodrama. The reduction of sterling plays to the cheap and nasty goes steadily on. There is Mr. Frederick Paulding, a young man of great promise, who has been associated with some of the best productions. He is playing in the "Sea of Ice," with a woman named Rose Lisle. A more insufferable affliction I never encountered. Mr. Paulding appears to have sold out his ambition for 15 cents. Rose Lisle was sent from Alexandria in a sarcophagus some years since. She is aromatic and, like all Egyptian ruins, well preserved. Her acting is like the reaction of Plutarch by a victim of St. Vitus' dance.

NYM CRINKLE.

Card Playing in the Clubs.

NEW YORK, June 26.—[Special.]—Card playing, which by the way, is more generally popular now as a social recreation, it is said, than ever before, is the principal pastime in all the clubs, excepting only the Union League. There are probably more heavy card players among the elders in the Union League than any other in the city, but a card is never dealt within its walls, and all attempts to change the rule signally fails. Perhaps I should say that all former attempts to induce a change of the rule in the Union League and allow card playing have failed, for there is a move now in progress that may eventually succeed. The rules of many of the clubs, most of them, in fact, prohibit poker playing, and poker is principally played at little clubs organized for the purpose. Hearts is the favorite game, with the stakes ranging from five cents to $5.

There are so many good whist players that they have organized a club of their own, called the New York whist club, which occupies the top floor in Chamberlain's proprietory, the Carlton club, which is a sort of annex of his Washington clubhouse, a private annex so to speak. There is always one and perhaps several rubbers played. Ex-Collector Isaac H. Bailey and Western Union Somerville, not to mention Judge Wilder Allen, being on hand as regular as the hours arrive. The stakes are generally small, and the patronage is probably a great disappointment to the genial host, whose munificence formly won for him the title of "Prince John." Because the Carlton is an enterprise of Chamberlain's, the great outside world confidently believes it is a gambling club. It is not this at all, as, excepting in the room of the Whist club, there is less card playing here than in any other club in the city, as all the rooms are devoted to dining purposes, and Chamberlain's ambition is to achieve reputation in this direction. It is not to be supposed that there is not often a quiet game of poker played in one of the private dining rooms after the cloth has been removed and the nuts and coffee disposed of, and Hon. John Bowen, Bonanza Mackey, John Ochiltree, and perhaps Actor Ed Thorne, form a little party. It is an indisputable fact that the modern congressman inclines to poker, and as all the visiting congressmen naturally gravitate to the Carlton there is, whenever they're about, a little game played in one of the private rooms; but the club is more a dining club than anything else. It is notorious that almost every night the private dining rooms in Delmonico's, the Hoffman, and the Brunswick are owned by poker coteries, and therefore, comparatively, there is less poker playing in Chamberlain's clubhouse than is popularly supposed.

Perhaps the most card playing is done in the Union and Manhattan. The rich group set, of which, by the way, Mr. Loubat with his income of $100,000 is a representative, indulge daily and nightly in high play, and nearly all of the scandals of the club have originated over the card table. The causus belli of the past season, the Parker-Lee quarrel, arose from a dispute about a poker hand. Several swell members have been detected practicing tricks which are supposed to be adopted only by the professional blackleg, and for a few days the excitement in the club has run high, the matter finally receiving a quietus by the departure of the offender to Europe or Florida.

In the Manhattan little casino is the private game, and it is said that there are several members who rely on their winnings from their less skillful brothers to pay all their club bills. It is here that those desperate players, the Hon. Benjamin Wood, and the Hon. James O'Brien, frequently meet at poker. There is also much card playing among the politicians in the Blossom club, and often the only room lighted up is the card room. Edward Kennedy, Police Commissioner French, Jimmy Boyle and Jake Sharp frequently meet here.

The principal card club, however, is the Phœnix, which occupies two floors of a brown stone mansion within the shadow of the Union club. Here poker is played, and it is the favorite haunt of all the big players, including the magnates in the Standard oil company and the produce exchange. The club has been organized some years, and has a surplus in the bank of some $9,000. Only gentlemen of recognized ability are eligible, and hence the quarrels that often arise over card playing from unmet obligations never have occurred to involve the club, as all the checks given are good, and consequently the institution has prospered; while tho Turf club, organized a few years since, professedly for gaming purposes, soon went to pieces by reason of the internecine troubles arising from the financial debility of its numerous memberships.

JOHN D'ARME.

The Talk of Society.

NEW YORK, June 26.—[Special.]—The arrival in the United States of Mr. and Mrs. Ritchie naturally calls to mind the younger days of her mother, for Mrs. Ritchie is a daughter of the well known leader in London society, Mrs. Peter Lorillard Ronalds. Mrs. Ronalds's great musical talent has an international reputation, and Mrs. Ritchie inherits much of her mother's genius in this direction. Old Peter Lorillard, the first of that name, was the grandfather of Mrs. Ritchie. She is also a cousin of Laura Conkling, a niece of Roscoe Conkling. Years ago Mrs. Ronalds was the famous Boston beauty, Miss Fannie Carter. She had a clear white complexion and chestnut brown hair, while her sister, Josephine, was a decided blonde. Their picture, when just budding into womanhood, with their arms wound around each other, still hangs in the Boston Athenæum of Art. Josephine Carter afterward died in Paris, in the height of her success and beauty. Fannie became Mrs. Ronalds. She was greatly admired abroad, and held as a beauty the place now filled by Miss Jennie Chamberlain. Mrs. Ronalds attracted great attention from Napoleon III. At a reception given at the Tuileries she wore a tiny bird's nest in her hair, and by mechanical means a humming bird flew in an out of the nest, while his mate quietly waited for him. She was always surprising people with the odd devices. Once, years ago, at a fancy fair held in Boston, Mrs. Ronalds, then Fannie Carter, had the charge of a table filled with bon-bons and candies. A strange gentleman took up a large sugar "kiss," of a variety made in Salem, Mass., and called, for some reason I am at a loss to know, "Salem Gibralters." What are these?" said the gentleman, holding one up. "They are sugar kisses," replied Miss Carter, "twenty five cents apiece." "Ah," said the gentleman, "I would give as many dollars for a kiss from you." "Done," said Miss Carter, "It is in the cause of charity." She then came from behind the stall and gave him a good smack; the gentleman promptly paid his twenty-five dollars, which she as readily turned over to the treasurer of the chairity.

Mrs. Ritchie, while attractive, is not as beautiful as her mother. All the old friends of her mother's, both in New York and Boston, and the Lorilliard families are destrious of entertaining Mr. and Mrs. Ritchie, and they have started on a round of pleasure; they will soon leave for Newport.

Mrs. General McClellan and Miss May McClellan sailed the 26th of the month for Europe, where they intend to reside for some time to come. Miss McClellan is fond of all animals and some times has strange pets. She had two tame white mice which she occasionally took to the opera, where the audience were startled at seeing them wandering around her bare shoulders.

Some one asked Miss Agnes Folsom, the singer, the other day, why, if she was Mrs. Grover Cleveland's cousin, she was not mentioned in Grandfather Folsom's will? In her reply she gave the real relationship. It seems their fathers only were cousins, Miss Agnes Folsom being of the Maine branch of the family. Mrs. Cleveland's grandfather was only grand uncle to Miss Agnes Folsom; however, there is quite a resemblance between the two young ladies, who are about the same age, although the relationship is so slight.

YORKVILLE ITEMS.

Mormon Missionaries Talk About the Crop and Politics.

YORKVILLE, S. C., June 26.—[Special.]—Our community is a trifle exercised because of the presence here of a trio of Mormon propagandists, who are seeking converts to their infamous faith. They seem very mild-mannered individuals, and thus far have behaved themselves decently. They are, however, obnoxious to our people, and they would do well to seek other fields in which to prosecute their work.

The crop prospects in this section are very bright. Cotton and corn look well. It is true we have had too much rain, but it has not hurt to any great extent. The fruit yield is abundant; the quality very good.

Three of our most esteemed citizens are in the field against Congressman J. J. Hemphill, of Chester. Colonel A. Coward, General E. M. Law and Colonel R. W. Wilson have been mentioned as candidates. Either one of them would make an excellent congressman; but there seems no probability of anybody being able to defeat the present incumbent, who has made an excellent record. Mr. Hemphill made his mark in the house of representatives, although one of the youngest members of that body.

But few articles have reached such a world-wide reputation as ANGOSTURA BITTERS. For over 50 years that they have been the acknowledged standard regulators of the digestive organs. UNION, S. C., June 26.—[Special.]—A member of the Charleston bar having nominated in a recent issue of the News and Courier Judge W. H. Wallace, of this town, as the successor of Governor Hugh S. Thompson, the Judge desires to state that he doesn't want the governorship, and would not accept the nomination under any circumstances. Our people will not rest contented till Judge Wallace goes to the United States senate.

New Republican Candidates for President.

Colonel McClure blames the rebellion on George Washington and Thomas Jefferson. This indicates the colonel's belief that Washington and Jefferson are to be the republican candidates in the next presidential campaign.

A Missouri Woman Misses a Hit.

From the Kansas City Times.

"I heard a well-known society lady make a strange break," said a West Side young gentleman. "She was speaking of a young lady friend, and, strange to say, she was praising her. She reached the summit of her friend's good qualities when she said: 'And then, too, she is so quick at repertoire.'"

THE KING MULE

By Thomas H. Stark.

Copyrighted, 1886, by S. S. McClure.

John Smooch and old Felix could not agree.

I was positive of this, although I had never heard them quarrel. John had repeatedly asked permission to discharge Felix, but I had refused, principally because I thought Felix a good driver and faithful worker, and also because I feared John had some malice against him.

One day, however, Smooch came to me and argued that Felix was so old that he could neither do his full quota of work nor attend to his team properly. John talked in a business way, and as I had given him charge of the stable-hands, I told him to give Felix notice of discharge from Saturday following.

Smooch notified him promptly, and Felix appealed to me.

"Becka say to me, las' night," said he, "dat Smooch niggah mout be stable boss, but Mist' Willie, he's de boss bosse, says she to me 'Felix you 'peal to Mist' Willie."

"But Felix, said I, "Smooch says you are not earning your wages, and he wants to put a younger man in your place.

"Yes, sah, I knows I'se kindah slow, but I gits away wid a heap o' stuff. I tole Becka las' night, if it warn't fur me an' dat king, whar would dat pile rails been dis mornin'."

The old man looked troubled. It was hard.

"Den dar's de king mule——"

"Well, well," said I, "we will see by Saturday night."

Felix had told me on several occasions that he averaged as many dray loads a week as any of the other drivers, so I determined to prove him.

Next day I kept count of all the loads he hauled, though he knew not that I watched him. Then I called Felix and Smooch into the office.

"John," said I, "I want you to take Felix's team tomorrow; and Felix, I want you to drive John's."

The old man looked aghast at the very idea of Smooch driving his beloved mule.

"But de king mule,—"said Felix.

"Never mind the king mule," said I; "I want you to drive John Smooch's team all day tomorrow."

Smooch looked surprised, but said nothing.

After supper I was informed that somebody wanted to see me at the kitchen door.

It was old Felix.

"Mist' Willie," said he, "dat king mule ain't got no 'spect for dat Smooch niggah."

"Really," said I, "and why hain't he?"

"Cause Smooch al'ays a makin' marks 'bout him. Dat mule's got sense an' done read him a lesson."

"In what way," asked I, "with his heels?"

"Jes' zackly," and the old man laughed maliciously.

"What did you want to see me about, Felix."

"Has you got any 'jections to my drivin' de king mule in Smooch's dray tomorrow?"

"I have, most decidedly," said I, and walked away.

Next day I watched Smooch closely, and set him at work on a pile of rails, just as Felix had been doing.

His record was no better than the old man's, and his mule seemed jaded and limped a little.

Felix was at the warehouse, watching him with mute tongue, but indignant eyes. It was evident that a wordy war was imminent between him and Smooch, so I went to the stable direct from the office.

There I found all the drivers gone except Felix, who was working with king's hoof.

What's the matter, Felix?" I inquired.

"Smooch's done killed de king mule," said he.

"He's a lively looking dead mule," said I.

"Dat mont be, Mist' Willie, but ef a mule git a nail in de hoof on a Friday, he allers take de lockjaw."

"You know that?" said I.

"Yes, sah.

"What has Smoochbeen doing for king?"

The old man looked up surprised. "Mist' Willie, does you think I let dat John Smooch tech dis mule's foot even ef he want to? Does you think dat king mule 'low anybody, 'ceptin' Felix, 'ten' to him, spec'al when he know he run de risk ob de lockjaw."

"Well, I don't think I would risk attending to him," said I.

Next morning, bright and early, I was called up by Andy Robinson, another one of the drivers.

"Come to de stable quick, Mist' Willie! 'Fo' God, k-k-k-king mule dead wid de lockjaw."

"Where's Smooch?"

"He ain't come yet, an' Felix, he d-d-dead too."

I ran to the stable.

There lay the king mule, stiff and cold, and by him lay Felix. In one hand was a bottle of liniment, and in the other a bundle of rags. Examination proved that Felix was not dead, but sleeping. It was plain that that the old man had toiled all night with his mule and finally, compleiely exhausted by his vigil, had fallen asleep.

Glancing up street I saw Smooch coming out of the rear of the corner grocery. I started to meet him.

"Smooch," said I, "what was the matter with king?"

"He's jes' hurt he's foot a little on de rocks on de wharf. I bathed it good in cold water las' night an' dis mornin', an' I think he be all right in a day or two. We can jes' lay uncle Felix off till de mule gits better."

"You mean to say you bathed the mule's foot, last night and this morning?"

"Yes, sah!" said he, boldly.

"Well then," said I, with withering smile: "What have you got to say when I tell you that king died last night with the lockjaw. Smooch, you have not only neglected him, but you have lied."

Smooch made no reply, but gave one glance at a heavy stick I happened to have in my hand and started down the alley as fast as he could run.

Meanwhile, Andy had waked Felix and they were both standing behind king, contemplating his mortal remains.

"Felix," said I, "I am going to make you stable boss."

The old man said nothing, not even thanking me for his promotion. He was thinking of his lost king.

"I want you to hire another man in Smooch's place, and—I will buy another mule."

Old Felix made no reply, although the order must certainly have been very gratifying to him.

"Well," said I, after a long pause "your thoughts seem to be entirely on your mule. What have you got to say about him?"

"Mist' Willie, dat king mule die happy. He gun to git wuss jes' arter you left de stable las' night. He look at me, rubbin him wid de linnemint, an' seem to say: 'Felix, you'se my fr'en?' Den I anser back, an' say 'yes, king, I'se yo'r fr'en.' Den he rub his nose 'gainst me—like to say 'Felix, I lubs you.'"

"And you rubbing him all the time," said I.

"Yes, sah. After while he gun ter show signs ob gettin' stiff an' weaker, so I piles up some nice beddin' an' he lay down."

"Almost dead," said I.

"Yes, sah, I 'spect so. Den he lay still an' quiet till mos' mornin' when he move his head roun' to me kindah sorrowful like, an' 'gun ter talk."

"Talk!" said I.'

"Yes, sah! 'Fo God, 'Mist' Willie, he gun ter talk."

"I expect that was about the time you went to sleep. But what did he say, Felix?"

"Say I, 'king, poor dum' beas', I'se yo'r fr'en.' He apen his eyes an' look at me steadfas', an' say, 'Good-bye—ole fr'en Felix, good-bye, forever.'"

EARTHLY SALVATION.

MR. W. A. MOORE, WHO FOR MANY YEARS HAS BEEN CONNECTED

With the Well Known Firm of Willingham Lumber Company, of Chattanooga, Tennessee, Gets Into Trouble, but is Rescued by an Atlanta House—Untold Sufferings.

As Atlanta people and those of all sections are interested in the troubles that have afflicted Mr. Moore, we quote his exact words:

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., January 8, 1886.

For two years I have been almost unable to walk and nearly all the time have suffered the most intense pain, rendering it impossible to sleep at night. I suffered with enlargement of the bone, and at one time it was feared that my leg would have to be amputated.

My disease was Rheumatism, and I used all the usual remedies without effect, and I had about lost confidence in the curative powers of all medicines. Several weeks ago I had to give up business, and had almost despaired of ever obtaining relief.

About this time Mr.

W. J. WILLINGHAM, OF ATLANTA,

Hearing of my complaint advised the use of B. B. B., assuring me that it would cure rheumatism, and was confident it would effect a cure on me. With but little faith I purchased one bottle, and, thank God, I am rapidly impoving. All pain has ceased, I sleep soundly at night, swelling has subsided, and for several days have been able to run up and down stairs, attending to the factory business as nimbly as ever. I thank you for this earthly salvation. I write this without solicitation or any knowledge of you except through your medicine, and because I feel grateful for what has been done for me. Should any one doubt this cure, I refer to the firm with whom I have been doing business for many years, and to any merchant of Chattanooga. W. A. MOORE,

Foreman for Willingham Lumber Co., [illegible] Chattanooga, Tenn.

A BEAUTIFUL GIRL.

A friend who has been visiting relatives in middle Tennessee called in at the office of Blood Balm Co. a few days ago, and voluntarily made the following startling statement relative to the perilous condition and narrow escape of a young lady whom he knew. We give his exact words:

"I have just returned from middle Tennessee, and while there had a most interesting conversation with a pretty young lady who had been confined in bed seventeen months from a hereditary scrofulous condition of her bones which gradually implicated every organ and tissue of her body. She suffered the most intense pain day and night, her appetite failed, her muscles contracted and her bones ached, rendering her so weak and feeble that she could not raise up in bed. Her condition grew worse and worse and for four months she was unable to move her feet one inch, and the family changed her positions by wrapping her up in sheets. During all this time she had been waited upon by a good physician, but she finally became so low that death was looked for by all who saw her.

Her mother made up her mind to try B. B. B., and while the doctor continued his visits, she administered B. B. B. to her daughter, the doctor not knowing anything about it.

Before one bottle had been used, she commenced moving her feet and said she felt better. This alarmed her parents, thinking it a bad omen, but she continued to improve, stating that the pain seemed to roll out of her all at once, and when three bottles had been used, she was pronounced well, and when we saw her, was as happy and healthy and pretty as any girl."

ONE LIVED, THE OTHER DIED.

History of Two Knots on Two Sisters at Tishabee, Ala.

A woman, formerly our slave, is now our cook. About eighteen months ago she became sickly, and had a cough and was confined to bed, and it was thought that she had consumption. The treatment by physicians failed to give relief. In December, 1881, a node or knot the size of a goose egg formed just above the pit of the stomach, which when lanced discharged matter for eight or nine months. One of these also formed under her arm, and three on her back, which discharged matter for a considerable time. For six months of this time she was confined to the house, and most o the time in bed. The stomach often refused food by rejecting what she had eaten. She used a grea deal of medicine, but failed to be cured. I bough one bottle of your B, B. B. (made in Atlanta, Ga., and gave it to her, and she commenced to improve I then bought and gave her three bottles more; and she continued to improve, and in two months' time her cough had ceased, her constitution strengthened, appetite and digestion good, all discharges ceased, nodes or knots disappeared, and she went to work apparently healthy and fattened up greatly.

This woman had a married sister of near same age who was affected in precisely the same way and about the same time. She had node or knot on pit of stomach, back, etc. She did not take any B. B. B., and the node on her stomach ate through to the cavity. She continued on the decline and wasted away, and finally died.

These were two terrible cases of blood poison. One used B. B. B. and was speedily cured—the other did not use it and died. It is most assuredly most wonderful blood purifier. I refer to merchants of this town. Yours truly,

W. T. ROBINSON.

Tishabee, Ala., May 1, 1886.

A Sheriff Released.

For a period of sixteen years I have been afflicted with catarrh of the head which baffled the use of all medicines used. Seeing the advertisement of B. B. B., I purchased and used six or seven bottles, and although used irregularly have received great relief, and recommend it as a good blood purifier.

(Signed) J. K. HOLCOMBE, JR., Sheriff of Haralson county, Ga.

Rheumatism.

Although a practitioner of near twenty years, my mother influenced me to procure B. B. B. for her. She had been confined to her bed several months with rheumatism, which had stubbornly resisted all the usual remedies. Within twenty-four hours after commencing B. B. B. I observed marked relief. She has just commenced her third bottle and is nearly as active as ever, and has been to the front yard with "rake in hand," cleaning up. Her improvement is truly wonderful and immensely gratifying.

C. H. MONTGOMERY, M. D.

Jacksonville, Ala., June 6, 1886.

A Sensation.

Why is it that three bottles of B. B. B. are sold in Atlanta to one of any other blood remedy, and twice as much consumed in the state of Georgia as any other preparation. No one need take our word, but simply ask the druggists. Ask the people. They are competent witnesses. Six houses in Atlanta are buying B. B. B. in five and ten gross lots, and some of them buy as often as every two months. Why these unprecedented sales here at home with so little advertising? Modesty forbids us making a reply. Had B. B. B. been before the public a quarter or half a century, it would not be necessary to be bolstered up with crutches of page advertisements now. Merit will conquer and down money.

CRITCHLEY'S.

By R. F. Steele.

Copyrighted 1886. By S. S. McClure.

An incident which proved more than a nine-days wonder to the people of Lone Tree, Nebraska, was the explosion at Critchley's. A local election, which resulted in the triumph of the temperance element, closed the last ostensible saloon in the town.

But Sam Critchley, who had conducted the most seductive of the five bar-rooms that flourished before the decisive election, remained in town and opened what he was pleased to call a "Temperance Billiard Hall."

It was, however, unavoidably noticed that the drinkers of Lone Tree continued to get drunk at Critchley's "temperance" resort with a scandalous regularity. Rumor was not faint of wing in spreading the report that Critchley sold a quality of whisky which, disguised under a medicinal name, was terribly effective.

One night the wooden building occupied by Critchley was blown to dinders by a can of blasting powder deposited by some unknown hands, near the ice chest. The wicked Critchley, supposed to have been asleep in an adjacent hotel, repaired to the scene and discovered the roof, rafters and side walls of his place of business heterogeneously commingled with a large number of suspicious jugs and demijohns in the cellar.

Mr. Critchley said nothing: went back to bed; at daylight packed his personal effects and departed westward on an early train.

David Martin, the wealthiest man in the village, owned the building. He quietly remarked to the grand jury which investigated the case, that to him it a little looked like the work of the more radical temperance element, but much more like the wicked machinations of the wicked Critchley, who owed him three months rent, and had gone he knew not whither. The building cost three thousand dollars, and was uninsured. In his suddenly vacated room Critchley left a note to the following effect:

"Mistur Martin, i belif this is the wuk of a passel of long-haird men and short-haird women. Tha es all fanatics. Sam Critchley."

The discovery of this document convinced the residents of Lone Tree that to Mr. Critchley was due the destruction of David Martin's property. The affair, however, was discussed for three weeks in the columns of the Lone Tree Laconic, the county paper, edited by Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Bryant, by "Junius" and "Veritas," and "Vox Populi."

"Vox" succeeded in having the last word, awarding the infamy of the deed to Critchley, and then, with a florid editorial whoop, Mr. Bryant closed the debate and the current of social life in Lone Tree subsided.

One of the customs of this social life was the congregating of a large portion of the population at the station of the U. P. R. R., to "see the cars come in." The curiosity of Lone Tree was greatly out of proportion to its size as a municipality. Among the many who greeted the arrival of the Omaha and Denver express one warm May evening were Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Bryant. They were on the lookout for "local items." While the locomotive was taking water and other business being transacted, Charley Talcott stepped from the train to stretch his legs. He stepped at once, it so happened, into the arms of Cousin Minnie, and Cousin-in-law Edgar Bryant, both of whom greeted him effusively.

"Where are you going, and why not stop off a day or two?" demands Minnie, coupling the two questions in a single breath.

"I am on my way to Denver, and perhaps further west," responded Charley.

"On business?" inquired Edgar Bryant, impressively surveying the crowd, which stood by greedily absorbing every syllable."

"No, not exactly; it is a vacation. I am out for health and sport."

"Sport," chimed Minnie: "then stop right off for a week or two and shoot wild geese. There are not near so many on the Platte river, above here, while with us they are thicker than hops, and eating up the wheat as fast as it comes out of the ground. Come. Do."

"Do you really mean it, Minn?"

"Mean it! I just do."

"All aboard," cried the conductor. Talcott dashed into the sleeper; seized an armful of coats, dusters and satchels, and running along with the baggage car, secured his gun. Then the editorial family bore Charley Talcott away in triumph to a good supper, in a neat dining room over the office.

They also gave a party in honor of Cousin Charley, of Omaha, and the guest went riding and hunting with the resident young folks, and duck shooting with the sheriff, the prosecuting attorney and the county clerk. Editor Bryant had "influence with the courthouse ring."

Talcott's week's visit lengthened into two, and then three weeks had been passed by him in Lone Tree's social swim. Again and again he was told of the explosion at Critchley's. He was a willing listener to everybody's version of the affair, and quietly managed to draw out the narrator's theories.

George Dowling, only son of Morgan Dowling, hotel proprietor, was a chum of Talcott's. At Critchley bar he had been one of the youthful drinkers, and a heavy one. Since the explosion he had apparently reformed. Another intimate of Talcott's was David Martin. Once these two men were surprised at a late hour of the night, hovering like bats about the scene of the explosion.

Miss Belle Dowling, George's sister, was the most beautiful and accomplished young lady in Lone Tree, a vivacious brunette, eighteen years of age, and a moving spirit in all social, charitable or temperance projects. More than this, she was reputed heiress of a wealthy bachelor uncle.

Ever since Talcott's arrival, gossip had been busy concerning the assiduous attentions of the handsome fellow to his cousin Minnie Bryant—when their names were mentioned, wise heads were shaken, and coarse men made coarse remarks.

"I wonder if Editor Bryant can't see through a millstone," observed Sandy Hellenback to a group of five in Whittaker's store.

"Why so?" asked Gabe Williams.

"'Cause that Talcott's all the time flirtin' with his cousin and drivin' her all 'round the country," explained Sandy.

"His cousin," said Willie Smilie, the postmaster's son, sneeringly; "ha, ha!"

"What's the matter with her bein' his cousin?" asked Sandy.

"O, nothin' but then I've seen cousins afore—he, he. The cold flat footed truth is I don't believe he's any cousin of the Bryant's at all."

"Why so?" demanded Sandy.

"Why, don't he mail a leter, and a big one, too, every night after twelve o'clock, in the outside letter box? Me and Jake Wambold has seen him do it. I know his fist, an' the letters is addressed to General Cowin, Omaha. Cowin's the great criminal lawyer."

During these relations the face of Gabe Williams became ashy pale, and his thin lips twitched nervously.

"Then once in a while he sends one to the Bryants. Cousins don't act that way. And once he sent a big one to Dave Martin."

Gabe Williams walked about uneasily, with head bent in thought. Belle Dowling, accompanied by Charley Talbott, entered the store. The girl made a few purchases, paid for them, and was turning from the counter when Talcott abrubtly said to Whittaker:

"Do you keep such a thing as blasting fuse?"

"Yes, sir," replied W.

"Let me have two yards." As Talcott said this he gazed steadily into the eyes of Belle Dowling. The girl flushed to the temples, and then grew deathly pale. Talcott paid for his strange purchase, and the two went directly to the hotel. The parlor was vacant, and at Talcott's urgent request, Belle entered the room with him.

"Miss Dowling," he said, "never before in my life has a line of duty been so painfully crossed with selfishness and—and moral cowardice. Do you not comprehend?"

Belle Dowling partially arose from her seat, her face for a moment illumined by a look of radiant heroism never before seen there by Talcott, and then, tremblingly shrinking within herself, she shrank back and buried her face in her hands; warm tears rained through her white fingers, and her lithe, graceful body swayed to and fro with emotion. At last Talcott sat down by her side and took her hand. For a moment she allowed it to remain within his, and then gently withdrew it.

"Belle," he said, now speaking tenderly, "I have this night discovered the last link in a chain of evidence which is to me, individually, the most disagreeable I ever encountered."

"Why should a man's duty—his business you might say—become disagreeable to him," faltered Belle.

"Beg pardon," replied Talcott, "but to what business do you refer? I may be obtuse, but I am sorry for the infirmity."

"You are a detective," answered Belle, quickly, yet in a low tone, and with a significant glance at the door.

"Yes," answered Talcott calmly, "you have said it. I have played the spy on you; on your people, on some others; have duped my friends, deceived my enemies, wormed myself into family secrets, and at the end of the hunt have found—"

"What?"

"Dead sea apples and the bitterness of death."

Talcott crossed the room and looked out on the murky night. He saw a few men lurking in the shadows made by a corner street lamp. Soon he returned and said:

"Miss Dowling, I know the name of the party who did the mechanical work of blowing up Critchley's. I also know the one person in all this town—the world; who inspired him: the person who paid him. The man was Gabe Williams; the moving, inspiring spirit, Miss Belle Dowling. Am I right?"

"Ha! ha!" laughed the girl in hollow, hysterical merriment. "You come to me with strange questions and ambiguous information. And you do me the injustice, sir, to insinuate that my spirit may be as craven as your own. What if I were to tell you that what you know and what you can prove are two different things? What if I were to tell you—this is but a hypotheical case—that the one who inspired the destruction of Critchley's hell-hole did it to save a life—her brother's? What if I were to say that after seeing the fruits of her legal efforts turned to naught by the wicked evasion of law, she paid the law-breaker in his own coin—illegality? What if she daily saw the one she loved best on earth sinking down in the scale of manhood, and risked a point and saved him? If I told you this, what would you do? Answer me that, Mr. Talcott."

"Pursue the same course I have already mapped out for myself."

"And what is that, pray?"

"Go home."

Belle looked eagerly into his face, and then frankly extended her hand, and this time it was not withdrawn.

"Miss Dowling," he said, "let this subject never be referred to in earnest after tonight. But what if I should dare to hope—that—in losing Mr. Martin's reward for my professional services I have found—your—love. Belle, will you be my wife?"

"Mr. Talcott, strange as it may appear, I cannot answer that question now. In the midst of sudden shocks and surprises even a strong man like yourself cannot calmly trust himself—you must know what I mean. I will be as frank with you as you have shown yourself to be with me. When I believed you plain Charley Talcott, Mrs. Bryant's cousin, I will confess I liked you some—I was not indifferent to you. When you drew me into this parlor—yes, when you bought that fuse at Whittaker's—I hated you. And then—when the man got the better of the spy, I—I was, and am grateful. I can say no more tonight."

"But may I hope?"

"Perhaps to suffer another disappointment. But who knows the future? Who knows but what another man may be sent to—to work up the case?"

"I do," said Talcott." I will go now, but lose no sleep on this account. Good night."

When Charley Talcott came out of the hotel and walked away in the direction of Bryant's, the group of men he had seen loitering at the corner followed him. He still carried the fuse. Suddenly he turned, showing that he was aware of the espoinage, and said:

"Gentlemen, what do you want?"

"We want you," said Gabe Williams, "to tell us what you are going to do with that fuse."

"That is my business."

"But we propose to make it our business," spoke up Sandy Hollenback, roughly.

"Yes, sir," said Gabe, edging nearer, and in his hand he held a car link; "you are one of them temperance radicals, an' we've had the disgrace of one blowin' up scrape in this town, an' we don't want another one."

At that instant the moon gleamed over a rugged edge of clouds; its rays glanced upon the plated barrel of a revolver held by Talcott. With a bitter oath, Gabe Williams rushed forward and struck savagely at his intended victim. A blaze from the pistol mouth, a sharp report, and the assailant staggered back into the arms of his horrified friends.

Seeing that there was no further disposition shown to molest him, Talcott, with quickened steps, hastened to Editor Bryants.

The unconscious form of Gabe Williams was carried back to the Dowling house and a physician summoned. He pronounced the wound through the right lung fatal. A rapidly increasing crowd assembled in the hotel office. In a room above lay the dying man. The story of the affair, as it was told in an exaggerated form, was very unfavorable to Talcott. According to Sandy Hollenback, Williams had been shot in the back; the physicians contradicted this. Then Smilie told his version, which was substantially the truth.

Upon reviving, the wounded man was inclined to be talkative. Fearing the effects of excitement, the doctor administered an opiate, which produced semi-delirium, gazing wildly at his attendants, he said, in a sharp, querilous tone:

"Talcott was on to me."

"Do you want to make a statement?" inquired Morgan Dowling.

"I'm goin' to die, aint I?" questioned the man, his low cunning yet asserting itself.

"The doctor says you are fatally wounded," replied Dowling.

"I know it; I feel it; and the man turned his head to the wall and groaned.

"Better send for a notary public," suggested the physician.

The notary was called—under influence of a stimulant Williams gave his testimony.

"You see," he said, speaking with great difficulty, "this Talcott is a detective. I knowed it. I seen him at times when he didn't think I seen him. I blowed up Critchley's. Dowling, your daughter backed me. She hired me to do it."

Morgan Dowling was led out of the room by George.

"Yes," continued Williams, "it was to save her brother George she said; and, gentlemen, did I ever give her away? Not much. Yet this ere Talcott was after her, an' I was on to him. I spotted him as soon as he did me—mebbe some sooner—an' I'd a laid him out, too, only for his gun." Here Williams' strength gave out, and he sunk into a stupor, from which the physician said he might not revive.

But the mystery of the explosion was at least exposed; the word was quickly carried from house to house that Critchley had not blown up Critchley's, but that Gabe Williams was the man.

Then the sheriff and some half dozen volunteer deputies began searching for Talcott.

Where was he?

And when Morgan Dowling sent to her room for his daughter, she was not there.

Where was she?

Gabe Williams was surprised to find himself alive the next morning. Lone Tree was in a state of suppressed excitement; the sheriff was in a "state of mind" about Talcott.

A week passed without news from either of the absentees; that the two were together no one doubted. Gabe Williams continued to grow better, but he still adhered to his antimortem statement, in which David Martin and the Bryants were partly able to corroborate him. Morgan Dowling mortgaged his hotel and paid Martin seven hundred dollars. But one day the owner of the former Critchley's was most agreeably surprised to receive a draft for the full amount, $3,000, and from Charley Talcott—real name, Thomas Seymour—residence, Omaha.

Compounding a felony, was it? Well, perhaps so, but law is excentric, especially west of the Missouri river. But when Thomas Seymour and Mrs. S., nee Dowling, stepped off the train at Lone Tree, they were greeted by a host of friends, beside the Bryants, the Martins and the Dowlings. And the quiet mourning worn by the bride of three months was a token that the wealthy uncle had not cut Bell short off with a shilling on account of her criminal complicity in the explosion at Critchley's.

THE SOLITARY HORSEMAN.

Why He Was Seen Meandering Along an Arkansaw Turnpike.

From the Arkansaw Traveler.

Captain Nigglesworth, who is a candidate for the legislature, stopped at the unpretentious house of old Sam Saber. After supper, while the candidate was sitting on the porch smoking a cigar, Saber's little boy shyly approached.

"Come here, my son. Sit on my knee. Now you're fixed. Do you go to school?"

"No, but me an' Dick killed a water moccasin yistidy."

"You did?"

"Ah, hah."

"Were you not afraid he would bite you?"

"Ho, he couldn't bite me. I could git outen his way an' hit him with a rock."

"My little man after awhile you can tell the people that you sat on Captain Nigglesworth's knee."

"Ho, that ain't nuthin' ter tell. I sot on my pap's knee yistidy, an' he's bigger'n you."

"Yes it would be something to tell, for I am going to the legislature."

"Pap says you ain't."

"What" putting the boy down.

"Yes, when he seed yer comin' he said: 'Yonder comes that blamed fool. He thinks he's goin' to the legislatu,' but he ain't got sense enough to holler when he's dog bit.' That's what my pap said."

"Get away."

A few moments later, had the night not been so dark, a solitary horseman might have been seen riding along the old military road.

A Sham Journalist on Shams.

From a London Letter.

The truth is, Art and Life are not convertible terms. I have never known a really great artist, and I have known many a one, who had a truly great heart. The function of feeling, and of reproduction, are opposed to one another. Art is simulative. It is nothing if not so, and simulation in time destroys real feeling. Bulwer was a brute, and Dickens was a sham; but they could draw buckets of sentiment from the wells of fancy. The wells were artistic wells. The sentiment was simulated sentiment. But the effects were real, because they were wrought upon an unknowing audience.

The world is growing wiser, and does not weep so much as it did over its fictions. I do not see that it is growing better; for the novelists and the poets are being succeeded by an infinitely more dangerous set of artists—the politicians, the professional place-holders—who are palming off for real upon a credulous and excited public that which is quite as false as the most exaggerated fictions of Bulwer and Dickens.

BULL'S SARSAPARILLA.

THE LIVER

Secretes the bile and acts like a filter to cleanse impurities of the blood. By irregularity in its action or suspension of its functions, the bile poisons the blood, causing jaundice, sallow complexion, weak eyes, bilious diarrhœa, a languid, weary feeling, and many other distressing symptoms generally termed liver troubles. These are relieved at once by the use of BULL'S SARSAPARILLA the great blood resolvent.

DR. JOHN BULL.—I have been for a number of years severely afflicted with a merciful headache and a dull, heavy pain in my liver. Three bottles of BULL'S SARSAPARILLA gave me more relief than all the others combined.
T. H. OWENS, Louisville, Ky.

DR. JOHN BULL.—I have examined the prescription for the preparation of DR. JOHN BULL'S SARSAPARILLA, and believe the combination to be an excellent one, and well calculated to produce an alterative impression on the system. I have used it both in public and private practice, and think it the best article of Sarsaparilla in use.
M. FYLES, M. D., Louisville, Ky.,
Asst. Phys. at Louisville Marine Hosp.

DYSPEPSIA

Variable appetite; faint, gnawing feeling at pit of the stomach, heartburn, wind in the stomach, bad breath, bad taste in the mouth, low spirits, general prostration. There is no form of disease more prevalent than Dyspepsia, and it can in all cases be traced to an enfeebled or poisoned condition of the blood. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA by cleansing and purifying the blood, tones up the digestive organs, and relief is obtained at once.

DR. JOHN BULL.—I have no hesitation in saying that I believe your SARSAPARILLA to be the best medicine manufactured for the cure of Scrofula, Syphilis, and many other cutaneous and glandular affections, having used it with entire success in numbers of the above cases.
JAMES MOORE, Louisville, Ky.

DR. JOHN BULL.—I procured one bottle of BULL'S SARSAPARILLA for my eldest son. Among the remedies and various prescriptions that he has tried for weak lungs and chest, this one bottle has been of more benefit to him than all. It has cured me of Dyspepsia as well.
JOHN S. McGEE, Horse Cave, Ky.

KIDNEYS

Are the great secretory organs of the body. Into and through the Kidneys flow the waste fluids containing poisonous matter taken from the system. If the Kidneys do not act properly this matter is retained and poisons the blood, causing headache, weakness, pain in the small of back and loins, flushes of heat, chills, with disordered stomach and bowels. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA acts as a diuretic on the Kidneys and bowels, and directly on the blood as well, causing the great organs of the body to resume their natural functions, and health is at once restored.

THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE.

SCROFULA

Is a peculiar morbid condition of the system, caused directly by impurities in the blood or by the lack of sufficent nourishment furnished to the system through the blood, usually affecting the glands, often resulting in swellings, enlarged joints, abscesses, sore eyes, blotchy eruptions on the face or neck. Erysipelas is akin to it and is often mistaken for Scrofula as it comes from the same cause, impure blood. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA by purifying the blood and toning up the system forces the impurities from the blood and cleanses the system through the regular channels.

DR. JOHN BULL.—I have used BULL'S SARSAPARILLA for rheumatism and kidney trouble, and my son has taken it for asthma and general debility. It has given us both great relief.
Yours truly,
THOS. H. BENTLEY, Rossville, Ill.

DR. JOHN BULL.—It is my opinion that your preparation of SARSAPARILLA is decidedly superior to any other now in use, and I will take great pleasure in recommending it for the cure of Scrofula and all diseases of the blood and kidneys.
R. B. ALLEN, M. D., Bradford, Ky.

DEAR SIRS.—I have used Johann Hoff's Malt Extract for the past five years in my private practice, and have found it to be the best health-restoring beverage and tonic nutritive known. I have found it especially good in persons convalescing from fever, in cases of dyspepsia, for mother's nursing, and in cases of weakly children and also in lung troubles. My attention was drawn by the immense importation semi-monthly, and about a million of bottles imported by you have passed my inspection in the Custom House satisfactorily for the past five years. Yours respectfully, W. W. LAMB, M. D.,

Chief Drug Inspector U.S. S. Port Philadelphia.

LISA.

A LOVE STORY.

BY CAROLINE FRENCH BENTON.

Copyrighted, 1886. All rights reserved.

"Lisa!"

"Coming, mein Herr!"

A demure little figure ran hastily down the narrow stairs and paused just above the landing, where stood a broad-shouldered American student."

"Lisa, how many times have I told you that I will not be called 'Mein Herr?' After all my lessons in English for nearly three months, you cannot say the simple word 'Grant;' it's discouraging, Lisa. It makes me feel that all my time has been thrown away. I may as well give it up."

"Oh, Mr. Roberts! I'm sorry-aber, but what would mein vater say if he should hear me call you 'Grant?'"

"He hears me call you 'Lisa' every day and does not object; now, if he were to hear me call you 'Lieboben,' then, indeed! In fact, Lisa, I've been thinking it over this morning, and hereafter I shall call you 'Sweetheart.' That word has never been translated into your charming tongue, so he won't understand, if he does hear me use it; but you will, Lisa, won't you? Do you know what I mean when I say 'Sweetheart?'"

Lisa blushed and looked down. She might have run away, but her two hands were held fast, while Grant Roberts's quizzical, fond eyes were studying her face.

What should a simple German madchen know of the wiles of a gay young American? He had boarded with them for three months, ostensibly studying chemestry at the university, but really studying with much greater assiduity the grim professor's sweet little daughter. When he had been in the house a week he found himself comparing her with the girls he knew at home. They could laugh and jest with him. They could discuss the latest novel, and prophesy knowingly of the success of the Harvard boat crew. And how they could flirt! Lisa, dear little thing, could take excellent care of her father; could read English intelligently, though she dared not try and speak it; knew, in fact, twice as much as any American girl, Grant told himself; she was the worthy daughter of her learned father in true German idiom. But dear little Lisa could not flirt! If, in their English conversations he thought it his duty to hold with her, he would strive to emphasize some points by a slight pressure of the hand, she would color to the roots of her soft yellow hair and thoughtfully withdraw her fingers.

If he would sometimes call her "Liebchen," as her father did, she would look reprovingly at him, and not reply. If, in pretended indignation at such treatment, he would distantly address her as "Fraulien," her eyes would fill and her lips quiver, but a stately "Herr Roberts" was her only sign of displeasure. Dear little Lisa! How fond of her he was! How hard it would be to leave her!

All this flashed through his mind as he stood at the foot of the narrow stairs and looked teasingly at Lisa's blushes. She rallied in a moment and looked up saucily.

"Did you call me down to tell me this, Mr. Roberts?"

"Well, not altogether," he replied, with a laugh, "but you drove the more important matter out of my mind. I wanted to tell you that I am going to make you a bangle. Do you remember telling me about the English girl at the park who wore so many that she tinkled all over, like the woman at Banbury Cross? Well, see here." He drew from his pocket an old American three-cent piece. "I found this in my pocket this morning. Where it came from I have no idea, but I suppose it must have been given me by mistake with my change some day. Seems odd to see it over here. Such an old one, too; one side is worn perfectly smooth. I have bored a hole in it, and I shall scratch your initials on one side, and you must wear it on your watch chain to remind you of me after I am gone."

After he was gone!

Lisa had been sitting on the stairs examining the bit of silver; at these last words she rose to her feet. Never before had he spoken of going away. He had so fallen in with their simple life that to her he had become a part of it, and she had ceased to think of his leaving them.

"After he had gone!" What would she do then?

Silence for a moment. Had he spoken the words to try her? She grew pale, and the tears gathered.

"Lisa, sweetheart! Do not look so! I am not going—not going for a long time. Don't let's talk about it; only you will be sorry, Liebohen, won't you?"

She tried to laugh, and turned to run up the stairs. Roberts caught her hand. "Don't go. Don't you want me to finish your bangle?" said he guilefully. But Lisa had gone, and he did not get a word with her again that day.

The next morning he walked slowly down to the postoffice, thinking still of Lisa, His careless words about leaving her and her emotion had, indeed, made him think more deeply than ever before. With truly youthful procrastination he had postponed the consideration of such an event till the hour came. The thought should not mar his happiness, and he had been happy. How his friends would laugh if they knew how he had spent the last three months. Lisa's father was too absorbed, to simple too suspect the young man of any interest beyond chemestry and German. Little did he know of the series of "accidental" meetings Roberts planned every day with his demure little daughter; each meeting an opportunity by no means to be neglected for English conversation. Roberts thought of it all. What would be the end, and when?

When, indeed; the end was nearer than he thought. He took a letter from the office and read:

MY DEAR SON: I know it will be a disappointment to you to give up your studies and the remainder of your trip, but I am sorry to tell you that I think you should be here. I am much alarmed about your father's health; he needs a complete rest and change. With a great deal of difficulty I have persuaded him to believe he can give up his business for the present, on the condition that you will undertake it, as well as you can, under the circumstances. I am sure you will return at once. If all goes well, I promise you that you may finish your trip before anothor year.

Roberts's face grew longer as he read. European travel and chemestry meant Lisa to him just now, and she had never seemed so dear and sweet as today; and he must go. Would he, if he could, take her with him? He paused. How would she compare with his home circle? Would he—would he ever be ashamed of her? He hated himself for the thought. No! she was lovelier, truer than any girl he knew. He rejoiced in her unlikeness to others; and Grant Roberts straightened himself proudly as he walked on. But would she go? Would she leave her father alone to cross the wide sea to another land? If not, still he must go. What should he do?

He stopped. Never in all his easy, happy life had he known perplexity like this. Should he tell Lisa all, and let her decide? But, if she should choose to go, how would his stately mother receive the little German daughter? And he had nothing of his own to offer her. Could he let her stay, an unwelcome guest, under the family roof?

He must go alone; that was plain; but he would win his mother's consent, establish a place in his father's business, and return. Perhaps events would shape themselves in such a way that all would be plain before another year. And Lisa would be true, he was certain. Yes, he would bid her trust him and wait. And with the burden lightened, Roberts again walked into the professor's narrow hall and called, "Lisa!" and the voice from the regions above answered, "Coming, mein herr?" She came slowly, thinking of yesterday, and paused near the top.

"Did you call me, Mr. Roberts?"

"Come down into the parlor, Lisa, I have something to tell you." He was grave, and Lisa felt frightened. Was he going to scold her?

Roberts closed the door after her and paused; how could he tell her?

"Lisa, dear," he said soberly, "I have had a letter from home, and my mother wishes me to return at once." Silence; Lisa was white; her eyes a little wider; she clasped her hands and stood waiting. "I must go, for my father is ill; but dear, I will come back, You will trust me, sweetheart, won't you? Indeed, I will come back!"

The blue eyes overflowed but the mouth was firm, and the hands clasped together. Grant could bear it no longer. His resolutions were forgotten. He threw his arms about her and murmured in her ears tenderer words than he had ever uttered or heard in his life.

Lisa wept, quietly, and listened without a word; but Grant was satisfied; she understood; she would wait.

"Sweetheart," he said presently, "kiss me, and then I must go. I shall take the noon train. The sooner I go, the sooner I shall return; you will help me?"

Lisa raised her head and gave the kiss with all her heart in it. "You must go," she said firmly, "but I know you will come back to me."

The hours flew by; his packing done, he rushed to the university, called the professor from his lecture and bade the bewildered man a hasty farewell, leaving him stunned by the rapid outpouring of explanations. An hour later he was gone and Lisa knelt at her bedside, clasping the bit of silver in her hand and sobbing out prayers for a safe voyage and a speedy return.

A long, low strip of yellow land to the right; that was Martha's Vineyard; a tiny speck ahead, that was Nantucket. Grant Roberts stood on the deck and stared absently into the blue water. He has changed in the three years since we saw him in Germany. He is broader and more manly in figure, but he looks weary and depressed. Heavy cares for those young shoulders have weighed upon them. His mother's letter recalled him just in time to receive from his father's lips a confused statement of an involved business before the older man, crushed by impending danger, sank into an insensibility which deepened into death.

Grant was left at the helm of what seemed a sinking ship, and he an inexperienced boy of twenty, whose business education had been confined to the knowledge how to cash a check. But a clear head and an intense determination to save his father's good name, at last made him master of the situation; and now, in his first vocation, he could look back on three years whose experiences had been almost invaluable; in a business, smaller indeed than his father's, but firmly established, and with bright prospects.

Truly, he had earned a summer's rest, and as he stood looking at the dimpling water unconsciously his burdens stepped into its depth.

The steamer was rounding the point of Nantucket harbor as he shook off his roverie and looked about him.

To his right stood a tall red lighthouse; on either hand hundreds of small sailboats; rising on a low hill, with its back to the sinking sun, lay the village.

On the wharf were crowds of people, excited over the sensation of the day, the arrival of the steamer.

They touched the pier; a shout, and a reply from the captain, and away ran the town crier, relic of by-gone days, his brass trumpet tucked under his arm, his wide hat brim flapping in the wind, as he called in his cracked and stammering tones, "Two hundred an' fifty on the boat tonight! Two h—hun—dred and fifty!"

Nantucket, indeed. It was all his fancy had pictured it. How peaceful it all was. Day followed day, and Roberts did not weary of the monotony. He bathed on the sunny beach, and idled up to the odd little brown postoffice for the letters he did not care to read; and he thought. He had hardly had time to think before, in the hurry of the past, and how his thoughts went back to Germany and Lisa.

Did she remember him? Had she waited for him? Did he wish that she had? He loved her still, but—should he ever go to claim her?

Women had had no place in his life, of late; his thoughts of the past were tender, regretful, but he scarcely had looked forward to hope. But now it was different, and in the quiet how the past came back.

Munich, with its wide, paved streets; the early walks from the market, when he carried the heavy basket for Lisa, and laughed over the hard names of the cabbages and potatoes which she tried to teach him. He laughed again at the teasing stupidity, and at the sound, a stranger looked at him with a kindly, inquiring glance. He was sitting on the beach, tossing the sand idly from one hand to the other. There seemed nothing to smile at. The elderly lady drew a little nearer; she had watched this good looking, silent, abstracted young man for days, and his loneliness determined her.

She raised her umbrella a little higher, and turned toward him with a question about the tide.

Roberts looked up with a dazed expression of one whose thoughts are far away. "I beg your pardon," he said, lifting his hat. She repeated her question with a smile.

"The tide? I believe it is still coming in. It is amusing to watch the bathers. My thoughts were far away just now, but I often look at those boys diving from the pier; there is even one young lady, who takes a 'header' every day."

He spoke with a cordial smile. Mrs. Craigie was becoming interested in this odd young man, who confessed to his pleasure in watching a pretty girl dive, and sought no nearer acquaintance.

"It is amusing," said Mrs. Craigie, "but I look at the water. My husband was a sea captain in the days of the India trade, and I have sailed with him over nearly all the waters of the globe. It all comes back as I sit here. But I have seen you before," she went on more briskly. "For the last three days I have sat at the same table with you. Are you not tired of blue berries?"

Roberts laughed. "Well, yes; but I prefer them to dried apple sauce, and there seems no alternative. It reminds me of the days of my boyhood, when I used to visit on my grandfather's farm. I've not had any since."

"I never touch it," said Mrs. Craigie, with a shudder. "Did you ever notice that when several of us refuse it, we always have it in pie the next day? Its the old story repeated; the boy who would not eat his crusts for supper had them put by for his breakfast."

"I think few have discussed the fact about the pie, or at least they are not too dainty to decline. Nantucket air does not seem to bring dyspepsia."

"Dyspepsia," said Mrs. Craigie. "I am fully convinced that the seven devils cast out of Mary Magdalene were seven distinct attacks of dyspepsia." And with that she rose and said she must go. "It is dinner time for us both. I wonder whether you would be bored if I asked you to change your seat at the table for one by me? I am selfish, for I want you to defend me from the old maid school teacher who sits next me. She is ashamed of the profession and wants to appear girlish, and inexperienced. She asked me one day if I should imagine that she was a teacher. I looked as surprised as possible, and said, 'No, I should not imagine you ever saw the inside of a school room,' and since then, to my sorrow, she has been more friendly than ever."

Roberts said to himself that this old woman was delicious, and accepted her kindly overtures with gratitude. From that day all was changed. Mrs. Craigie would not leave him to his solitude, and introduced him to all the charming girls she knew, but his indifference excited her curiosity, and she decided that this young man had a story. The explanations came without her asking.

They sat on the beach one day when Roberts asked, "Is that a 'scalp string,' as I am told young ladies call them, Mrs. Craigie?" He pointed to a bunch of seals and charms at her belt.

"I might say of each of them, 'Thereby hangs a tale,'" she replied, lifting them. "They came from all parts of the world, and each has a history. Not to go into details, this shell came from 'India's coral strand;' this is a tiger's tooth; I saw my husband shoot the beast. This is a precious stone of some value an Arab sheik gave my husband for a strange service. It is still uncut, you see; this is a nugget of gold my brother dug in California, in the mine where he lost his life; and this is a bit of silver I found on the street in Munich two years ago. An American three cent piece, you see, so old it is smooth on one side. It must have been worn as a bangle, for here is a hole. It was an odd place to find the coin, and I always had a queer feeling about it, that there was a story attached. Perhaps I shall know some day."

Roberts could not speak for a moment, then he said hoarsely, "Mrs. Craigie, it is mine. May I have it?" The past rushed over him as his fingers closed on the coin. Lisa's sweet face, wet with tears, as he last saw it, rose before him. A sudden flash of inspiration showed him the weary, faithful heart, waiting—waiting—for the lover who was to come back, but who never came. Bye and bye he told the story briefly, with wet eyes. And then, keeping the coin, he rose with determination.

"Mrs. Craigie, good-bye. I am going to her. I cannot thank you for all your kindness to me, and now, this ending; it is fate—providence. I shall take the noon boat for home, see my mother and tell her all; spend my vacation in a trip to Munich, and, if I can, bring back Lisa, and you shall see us both." The listless, weary look was quite gone. Roberts was pale and excited. Mrs. Craigie rose without a word of expostulation at his haste.

"Go, my dear boy, and she will come back with you. Then bring her to me."

Three weeks later the door of the professor's house in Munich opened softly, and Grant Roberts stood again at the foot of the narrow stairs. For a moment he could not find his voice. What if she should be away; changed; dead. The fear almost made his heart stop. Gathering together his failing courage, he called softly, "Lisa."

A moment's pause; no answer. Then a startled, girlish face appeared at the top of the stairs.

Whose voice had she heard? There was no "Coming, mein Herr," to call forth rebukes this time. One cry of surprise and joy, and Liza ran full, straight into the outstretched arms. The lost bit of silver, mourned so long, had been a talisman, and brought her lover home.

Probably a Colorado Scheme in Disguise.

From the Brooklyn Eagle.

The suggestion that Mrs. Cleveland's head be stamped on the siver dollar may have been made in the hope that no one would be so ungallant as to assert that a silver dollar bearing her image is worth only eighty cents.

AYER'S PILLS.

Sugar-Coated Cathartic

If the Liver becomes torpid, if the bowels are constipated, or if the stomach fails to perform its functions properly, use Ayer's Pills. They are invaluable.

For some years I was a victim to Liver Complaint, in consequence of which I suffered from General Debility and Indigestion. A few boxes of Ayer's Pills restored me to perfect health.—W. T. Brightney, Henderson, W. Va.

For years I have relied more upon Ayer's Pills than anything else, to my bowels. These Pills are mild in action, and do their work thoroughly. I have used them with good effect, in cases of Rheumatism, Kidney Trouble, and Dyspepsia.—G. F. Miller, Attleborough, Mass.

Regulate

Ayer's Pills cured me of Stomach and Liver troubles, from which I had suffered for years. I consider them the best pills made, and would not be without them.—Morris Gates, Downsville, N. Y.

I was attacked with Billious Fever, which was followed by Jaundice, and was so dangerously ill that my friends despaired of my recovery. I commenced taking Ayer's Pills, and soon regained my customary strength and vigor.—John C. Pattison, Lowell, Nebraska.

Last spring I suffered greatly from a troublesome humor on my side. In spite of every effort to cure this eruption, it increased until the flesh became entirely raw. I was troubled, at the same time, with Indigestion, and distressing pains in

The Bowels.

By the advice of a friend I began taking Ayer's Pills. In a short time I was free from pain, my food digested properly, the sores on my body commenced healing, and, in less than one month, I was cured.—Samuel D. White, Atlanta, Ga.

I have long used Ayer's Pills, in my family, and believe them to be the best pills made.—S. C. Darden, Darden, Miss.

My wife and little girl were taken with Dysentery a few days ago, and I at once began giving them small doses of Ayer's Pills, thinking I would call a doctor if the disease became any worse. In a short time the bloody discharges stopped, all pain went away, and health was restored.—Theodore Esling, Richmond, Va.

TRUSTEES' SALE.

Property of the Columbus Manufacturing Company.

Complete and fully equiped cotton factory, together with nearly a mile of the finest water power on the Chattahoochee river, just above the city of Columbus.

STATE OF GEORGIA, MUSCOGEE COUNTY—By virtue of the power vested in us under the terms and conditions of a certain deed of trust executed to the undersigned J. Rhodes Browne and A. Illges, trustees, by the Columbus manufacturing company, of Muscogee county, state of Georgia, dated March 1, 1884, whereby the said corporation conveyed to us all the property, real and personal, hereinafter described, in trust, to secure the payment of its certain issue of bonds and the interest coupons thereof as in said trust deed specified and enumerated (all of which appears duly of record in Mortgage Deed Book "A'," folios 367 to 373, March 5, 1884, in the clerk's office of superior court Muscogee county, Georgia and in Record Deeds, volume O O, pages 81 to 88 inclusive, March 22, 1884, office of the probate court in the county of Lee, state of Alabama, and in conformity with the directions and terms prescribed in the resolutions passed by the holders of said bonds, on April 24, 1886, under the authority conferred by said deed of trust.

We will sell in the city Columbus, Muscogee county, Georgia, on the 3d day of August, 1886, between the legal hours of sale, in front of the auction house of F. M. Knowles & Co., on the northwest corner of Broad street and Tenth (formerly Crawford street,) (being the usual place for sheriff's sales in said city of Columbus) at public outcry, to the highest bidder, for cash, the following described property of the Columbus manufacturing company, to-wit: All those lots and parcels of land situated, lying and being, as follows: Fractiona section number twenty-six (26) and the north half of fractional section number thirty-five (35), both in fractional township number eighteen (18), range number thirty (30) in formerly Russell now Lee county, state of Alabama. Also the following lots of lands lying and being in the eighth district of Muscogee county, state of Georgia, known as lots number eighty-six (86) and eighty-seven (87) and the west half of lot number seventy-four (74) and fractions numbered ninety-one (91) and ninety-two (92), and island number three (3) in Chattahoochee river, and a small enclosure situated east of the residence formerly occupied by J. R. Clapp, used as a residence and grazing lot, containing seven (7) acres more or less. All of said lands last described lying and being in the county of Muscogee and tae of Georgia, and together with said lands in Lee county, Alabama, containing eight hundred and thirty (830) acres more or less.

Also, all of the said Columbus manufacturing company's buildings on said land in Muscogee county, Ga., operated as a cotton factory, and with all of the improvements in any manner appendant and appurtenant thereto, inclusive of the cards, spindles, looms, machinery and fixtures of every kind whatever contained in said buildings also all and singular the other improvements on all of the lands aforementioned and described; also the entire water power owned and controlled by said Columbus manufacturing company on and in said Chattahoochee river, together with all and singular the rights and franchises by the said Columbus manufacturing company held and possessed therein under the laws of Georgia.

The plant of said cotton factory consists at present of 4,544 spindles, 149 looms and other suitable machinery, all in good condition and producing good work. Present capacity 7,500 yards a day of heavy sheetings and shirtings, three yards to the pound

The operatives' houses and improvements generally in excellent condition, labor abundant, lands elevated and location of property unsurpassed for health, convenience and economical production—free from the burden of municipal taxes paid by all the other Columbus mills, yet within three miles of the city of Columbus and three quarters of a mile of Columbus and Rome railroad. The water power is the finest in the south, controlling and embracing the whole bed of the Chattahoochee river for the distance of about one mile along the lands of the company, said lands extending along its banks upon the Georgia and Alabama sides of the river. Only a small portion of the water power is required and utilized in running the present mill and the natural falls in the river render but a simple inexpensive dam of logs and plank necessary. This magnificent water power is easily controlled and has a fall of forty-two and a half (42½) feet within three-quarters (¾) of a mile. With a comparatively small expenditure upon a new dam, 125,000 (one hundred and twenty-five thousand) spindles with looms in proportion can be driven by this water power. Capital for the erection of additional mills and utilization of the immense power now wasted, is all that is needed to make this property the site of a prosperous and populous manufacturing village. The personal inspection of capitalists is invited. Full and satisfactory details will be furnished on application, rdon Leaves Bacon Far in the Rear.

AN SWEEP OF THE COUNTIES,

Enables Gordon to Double Bacon.

A SHARP WEEK'S WORK IN THE FIELD

The result of yesterday's elections, which is detailed below, carries unmistakable meaning. All the sophistries of Mr. Bacon's friends can't wipe out the fact that General Gordon is the clear choise of the people of Georgia and that they intend to nominate him for governor. They are going to rebuke the slanderers and give him the honor that he has won by twenty-five years of illustrous service in peace and in war.

The result is about as follows: There were nineteen counties to act on yesterday, choosing fifty delegates. Of these Jones county postponed action, leaving only forty-eight delegates to be elected, in eighteen counties. Of the eighteen counties we have not heard from Chattooga and Webster. Of the remaining sixteen, Gordon carried every single county, and Major Bacon carried none. It is probable that he will carry these two counties not heard from. This would make the result of yesterday's elections, Gordon forty-four, Bacon four. A more one-sided result was never reported at the polls of Georgia on so large a balloting. There are two points made by the Macon Telegraph which we discuss herewith.

First. That there were a group of Gordon counties pushed forward for effect. The utter absurdity of this is found in the fact that the counties are scattered all over Georgia. There is Dade and Whitfield in the northwest, Glynn and Pierce in the southeast, Lincoln and Hall in the northeast, Miller and Baker in the southwest. Lowndes on the Florida border, Terrell and Taylor in lower Georgia, and Troup, Meriweather and Pike in upper middle Georgia. Nineteen counties could not have been selected that more thoroughly cover every section of the state and represent the average sentiment of the people of Georgia. General Gordon and his friends have had nothing to do with the calling of them. They were called by their local committees, who in four cases out of five are controlled by the Bacon men. This fact is beyond dispute.

2nd. The Telegraph's table, a most curious little affair, is based on the election of 1883. In that convention Major Bacon had one hundred and thirty-nine votes, omitting Burke county (which the Telegraph puts in the anti-Bacon column, although it votod for Bacon.) This left him thirty-seven short of a majority. On yesterday morning the Telegraph's table showed that he had gained eight votes on his vote of 1883. Really he had gained only six votes. But let us say that the Telegraph was correct, and that on yesterday he had a net gain of eight votes of the thirty-seven that he needed to add to his vote of 1883 in order to get a majority. He lost yesterday the following votes, which he carried in the convention of 1883: Harris 4, Meriwether 1, Troup 2, Dade 2, Terrell 1 Pierce 2, Glynn 2. A total of fourteen votes. This taken from his gain up to yesterday of eight votes would leave him now six votes behind his vote of 1883. Over half the counties have acted and instead of gaining one-half of the thirty-seven votes he needed to have given him a majority in '83, he has a net loss of six votes. No one will deny that Major Bacon had a better chance to gain on his old vote, in the first half of the campaign, than he will have in the last half. Mr. Pat Walsh has delivered to him the six votes of Richmond, the two votes of McDuffie and the two votos of Columbia. His experience in Warren, Lincoln and Greene justifies us in saying that he has about delivered all the goods he can handle. Clarke county gave him her two votes before Gordon came out. He has no such votes to rely on in the last half of the battle, and instead of gaining he will lose in heavier proportion than he has already lost on his vote of 1883.

So much for the lesson of the Telegraph's table.

We repeat that there is but one meaning to yesterday's election; it is that the people have determined to rebuke Gordon's slanderers and wipe off the stain they have put on his character by an overwhelming nomination. They know that his record of twenty-five years is without blemish, and is that of an honest man, a patriotic citizen, a brave soldier, and a Christian gentlemen, and they do not intend that a miserable gang of malcontents shall defame and traduce him, and build up petty ambitions on the ruins of his illustrious character. We predicted this at the first. Every single election day that has come since General Gordon first entered the field has justified cur prediction and made it more emphatic.

We have but one word to add to the Gordon men throughout Georgia, and that is, work. There are only ten more days of active campaigning in most of the counties. Surely every Gordon man can give that much to the cause. The Bacon men are desperate and will make every effort to retrieve their losses. Let every Gordon man stand firm, and there is no doubt of the result. Avoid "uninstructed" tickets. They mean nothing more or less that Bacon at least. Vote the straight Gordon ticket for Gordon delegates and everything will be right, and do not forget to work. Work all the time, and when you are tired, keep working. Organize in every district where you are not ocganized and see that no tricks are played. The heart of the people is with Gordon. See that nothing stands between him and the people. With this advice to the Gordon men we invite attention to the returns which are published below:

TROUP TURNS IN,

And Gives Gordon a Rousing, Good Majority.

LAGRANGE, Ga., June 26.—[Special.]—Gordon's old home county has stood by him nobly, and given him a majority of about 200.

Bacon made the strongest kind of an effort to carry Troup. He not only sent personal and pleading letters to numerous individuls, calling upon them to support him, but he sent his chief lieutenant, Dr. Felton, into the county to do missionary work.

The people heard all the doctor had to say, and today greet him by a majority of 200 for Gordon. It is hoped that the doctor will come again when his supply of gall gives out.

The official return of eleven districts of the thirteen in the county will show a majority of 187. They are as follows: West Point district, 112 for Gordon, 49 for Bacon; McLendon's 23 for Gordon and 4 for Bacon; LaGrange, 136 for Gordon and 106 for Bacon; Hogansville, 36 for Gordon and 71 for Bacon; Harrisonville, 24 for Gordon and 22 for Bacon, Roughedge, 79 for Gordon and 35 for Bacon; O'Neall's Mills, 79 for Gordon and 9 for Bacon; Pool's Mills, 7 for Gordon and 38 for Bacon; Antioch, 25 for Gordon and 24 for Bacon; Mountville, 42 for Gordon and 27 for Bacon; Long Cane, 31 for Gordon and 22 for Bacon. West Vernon and East Vernon are yet to hear from. They will give a majority of at least 65. A great deal of excitement prevailed. The Gordon men are happy over the result.

Old Troup sends greetings to Mrs. Gordon.

JONES POSTPONES,

But Her Votes Will be Plucked for Gordon All the Same.

MACON, Ga., June 26.—[Special.]—Today a mass meeting of five hundred people assembled in Clinton, Colonel Homer Ridley, chairman of the mass meeting. The executive committee stood seven to seven, and after a long discussion the Gordon men agreed to a primary meeting by districts for July 15. The mass meeting stood six to one for Gordon and the county of Jones stands three to one in the same way.

After the report was brought in Colonel Sam Jemison addressed the audience for one hour. A grand collation was spread at the residence of Colonel R. V. Hardeman, to which General Gordon and quite a number of his friends were invited. After dinner General Gordon, with Mrs. Colonel Hardeman and a number of ladies and gentlemen walked to the court house, and as he entered, cheer after cheer went up from the audience. One solitary man cheered for Bacon.

General Gordon was introduced by Professor F. J. M. Daley, of Macon, who made a nice little point on his former antagonism to Gordon on the Colquit campaign, and his earnest support of Gordon himself in the present campaign. Gordon spoke for a little more than an hour and cheer upon cheer enterrupted the progress of his address.

The enthusiasm of the crowd who were packed and jammed in the building knew no bounds, and even when he came down from the stand, old veterans and ladies crowded around to shake hands with the people's choice.

Jones will fall into line on the 15th of July, and but for the Gordon men's magnanimity, it would have went today.

LOUD ENOUGH FROM LOWNDES.

The Gallant Old County Wheels Into Line for Gordon.

VALDOSTA, Ga., June 26.—[Special.]—Five hundred men and over, the bone and sinew of Lowndes county, met here today to elect delegates to the state convention.

When General Gordon's candidacy was first announced, the men who had promised to deliver the county to Bacon, loudly insisted that Lowndes was solid for the candidate of the Macon ring. The Times, edited by Charley Pendleton, also advocated the cause of Bacon with vigor.

The men who assembled here today, however, had heard of Gordon before. They had heard of him when minnie balls whistled in the air. The result was a vote of three hundred and thirty-two for Gordon, and only one hundred and forty-seven for Bacon. The delegates selected are Messrs. B. F. Whittington and O. K. Jones, with Messrs. J. W. Harrell and C. R. Ashley as alternates.

The enthusiasm for Gordon is intense.

WHITFIELD WALKS UP

And Answers Dr. Felton's Recent Harangue.

DALTON, Ga., June 26—[Special.]—The contest in this county has attracted wide attention throughout the state. Being the home of Colonel L. N. Trammell, the independents and republicans combined against Gordon in order to snub in Trammell. Felton was brought into the fight, and the echoes of his recent tirade had not died away when the voters began to act today

As an answer to Felton's insinuations against the dead and the slanders of the living, Whitfield has given General Gordon a majority of 250.

Fain has a small majority over Clements.

HURRAH FOR HARRIS,

Which Goes for General Gordon by 200 Majority.

CHIPLEY, Ga., June 26.—[Special.]—Primaries were held today in Harris county. Ten districts gives Gordon four hundred and forty and Bacon one hundred and forty-one. Davidson's district is solid for Gordon. The poll is not given. The three districts not heard from will increase Gordon's majority.

Ten precincts give Tom Grimes for congress fifty one majority over Harris. Four precincts are to be heard from which may increase Grimes's majority.

GLYN FOR GORDON,

And Jake Dart Dances a Hornpipe on the Beach.

BRUNSWICK, Ga., June 26.—[Special.]—The people of Glyn county today voted to send Gordon delegates to the state convention.

When the Baconites found that "the people" were coming into the city, they knew that their doom was sealed. Not to be baffled, however, they resorted to the "uninstructed delegation" dodge, but the Gordon men were sharp enough to see through it, and a straight-out Gordon ticket was elected.

Jake Dart is the happiest man in the county, and is announced to dance a hornpipe on the beach.

A DOT FROM DADE.

Which Pleases General Gordon and Saddens Major Bacon.

TRENTON, Ga., June 26.—[Special.]—The great northwest county of Georgia has declared or Gordon.

Strong efforts were made to bullyrag and bulldoze the people into the service of the Macon ring.

The result of the ballot today—257 for Gordon and 188 for Bacon—shows that justice triumphs over the methods of Felton and his crew.

TAYLOR POINTS THE WAY.

A County Which Seems to Have Lost All Sight of the Major.

BUTLER, Ga., June 26.—[Special.]—Taylor county today voted for General Gordon by a good majority.

The people turned out, and were determined that the good name of John B. Gordon should not be buried beneath the slanders of an unprincipled conspiracy.

Taylor points the way.

HAIL FOR HALL,

Which Declares its Preference for General Gordon.

GAINESVILLE, Ga., June 26.—[Special.]—Seven districts in the county were to have acted today. Five of them have gone for Gordon. In one there was a tie and in another no election. In two districts Bacon did not get a vote. This secures the county for Gordon beyond a doubt, as the doubtful districts have voted.

THE VICTORY IN LINCOLN

Snatched from Under the Wing of Richmond County.

LINCOLNTON, Ga., June 26.—[Special.]—Today at the largest mass meeting ever held in the county, old Lincoln elected Gordon delegates to the gubernatorial convention. Great enthusiasm prevails, because the county has been claimed from the first for Bacon. He spoke here, and Tutt spoke here; and all that, but all in vain. The people have declared for General John B. Gordon.

The ten delegates are W. T. Murray, N. W. Stevenson, S. J. Colley, T. B. Hillingshead, S. T. Nasely, J. W. Barksdale, D. R. Cade, H. N. Freeman, A. F. Chenault and J. W. Edwards, and the alternates are W. C. Ward, J. A. Murray, F. H. Mitchell, Anderson Jones; H. E. Sprather, Thomas Leverett, Cook Ray Grons, Taylor Fuller, A. G. Bently and B. J. Dubose.

TERRELL CENSURES FELTON'S SLANDER

A Majority of Three Hundred Rolled up for General Gordon.

DAWSON, Ga., June 26.—[Special.]—This has been a glorious day for Gordon, and the people have nobly rebuked the slanders of the Macon Telegraph.

Here, as elsewhere, local influence had been pledged to Bacon for years. Gordon's name had been slandered by Bacon's followers; the county was floodod with the vilest kind of campaign literature, and Macon Telegraphs were scattered abroad without price.

But today the people spoke. Every district in the county went for Gordon. Out of a total vote of 879, Gordon received 598.

The majority of O. B. Stevens over R. L. Melton for the legislature was 118.

BRONWOOD, Ga., June 28.—[Special.]—Bronwood district, Terrell county, gave a majority for Gordon of thirty-seven. This is our answer to the slanderous charges of the Felton gang.

O. N. GEISE.

PIERCE STANDS PAT

And Joins in With the Gallant Gordon Procession.

BLACKSHEAR, Ga., June 26.—[Special.]—Bacon has worked this field for years, and its position in his column was considered assured.

The county was plentifully flooded with Felton's harangues and "Plain Talks" were in profusion. The people were surfeited with slander—slander of the living and slander of the dead. They were nauseated by the daily doses of the Macon Telegraph.

At the mass meeting today, Gordon received 192 votes and Bacon 127. Thus Pierce sends greeting to the great disgruntled of the central city.

Colonel J. C. Nichols heads the delegation.

The congressional delegates are uninstructed, but are for Mershon.

CARRIED ON A LITTER

So That he Might Vote for General Gordon, His Choice.

GREENVILLE, Ga., June 26.—[Special.]—Meriwether is solid for the gallant Gordon.

In the primary today Gordon carried the county three to one. The official returns are not in, but the Bacon men concede at least three to one, some districts not giving Bacon a single vote.

Captain A. J. Snelson, one of our largest farmers, was brought in on a litter five miles to vote for Gordon.

We feel good over our victory. Even Greenville votes two to one for Gordon.

COWETA COMES IN

And is Warmly Welcomed as a Member of the Atlanta Ring.

NEWNAN, Ga., June 26.—[Special.]—After weeks of dragooning by the Newnan Advertiser, and the circulation of slanders on General Gordon, the people of Coweta have rebuked the slanderers by electing Gordon delegates. The county was, perhaps, never before so thoroughly canvassed, both sides having worked up every available vote. The voting was by districts, but Gordon has carried the popular majority as well as the majority of the districts.

The Macon Telegraph and its little prototype here, are now relegated to the rear.

PIKE IS PROUD,

And She Richly Deserves to Feel That Way.

BARNESVILLE, Ga., June 26—[Special.]—The Barnesville district gave Gordon a majority of 27; Milner district gave him 21 majority.

These figures indicate the result throughout the county.

Pike will vote with the big majority in the state convention.

BAKER SAID TO BE SAFE.

The County Reputed to Have Gone for Gordon.

ALBANY, Ga., June 26.—[Special.]—From persons in from Baker county, it is learned that there is no doubt of the result of the gubernatorial contest. The old soldiers had Gordon's case in hand, and will do their duty.

MILLER MARCHES IN.

Another Southwest Georgia County Does Its Duty.

BAINBRIDGE, Ga., June 26.—[Special.]—Miller county today voted for that gallant soldier, General John B. Gordon. Her people send greeting to the next governor of Georgia.

How the Returns Were Received.

Yesterday was an exciting day at Gordon's headquarters in Atlanta. By two o'clock in the evening the two rooms occupied by the committee were thronged with anxious visitors asking for the news. It was generally conceded that the Bacon men had made the stubborn fight of the campaign during the present week, and there was great anxiety as to the outcome of the day's ballotting.

The first news received was a dispatch from Mr. L. N. Cole, of Newnan, asking for the news and stating that the fight was close in LaGrange. In a few minutes a dispatch was received from Lowndes county stating that Gordon had carried it by 200 majority. This was followed by a dispatch from Taylor stating that Gordon had carried Reynolds and Butler. The news came on without a break during the afternoon. When it was announced that Dade county had given Gordon about seventy majority, the rooms shook with applause. When Lincoln county's vote was announced for the Gordon columns by a vote of five majority, the cheering was renewed. Old Troup's two hundred majority, and Terrell's three hundred, kept the crowd in a good humor. The crowd kept increasing until the rooms were densely packed. At 8 o'clock the interest was centered on Coweta. It was at first reported that it had gone for Bacon, but that was stoutly denied by those who had studied the campaign in that county. At 9 o'clock news came that the districts stood six for Gordon and five for Bacon, with two to hear from. At half past nine Grantville was reported as having gone for Bacon, which left the districts six and six, with Cedar Creek to hear from. The excitement was now at fever heat, and at fifteen minutes to ten a telegram was received that Cedar Creek had gone for Gordon by three majority, which gave him the county, his popular majority in the county reaching about 150. Just at this moment General Gordon himself entered the room having come up on the 9:30 train from Jones county, where he spoke in the morning. He was greeted with the wildest cheers and enthusiasm. On the wall of the committees' room is hanging a large map of the state carefully marked off. Each county that has acted is tagged with a small round wafer, the color of the tag indicating the candidate that carried the county. The Gordon color is red, Bacon blue and Jones yellow. When Coweta's vote was announced one of the clerks of the committee had prepared a huge red placard cut in the shape of Coweta, and covering the whole county, and was tacked up amid rounds of applause. The Gordon men were jubilant of course at the result, but simply determined to get to work all the harder next week to confirm the victories that had been won, and make Gordon's nomination and election sure.

How They Stand.

The vote of the counties that have acted to date is as follows:

BACON IN FORSYTH.

He Grows Petulant and Testy Again—Large Crowds Present.

FORSYTH, Ga., June 26.—[Special.]—The great Bacon meeting which has been so extensively drummed up came off today. On account of the advertisement of a free barbecue, delegates came from all the surrounding counties. The crowd is estimated to be from 1,500 to 1,800, including men, women, children and negroes. After parading around the public square, headed by the Forsyth brass band, they halted at the grove of Captain T. B. Cabaniss. Dr. Alexander arose and said: "Ladies and gentlemen, we are glad to welcome so distinguished a guest who will address—" when down came the platform with a crash. Confusion reigned. Some wanted to put the major on the table others for him to speak from the piazza of Colonel Hammond's residence near by. After some delay the band wagon was drawn up over the ruins of the platform and Doctor Alexander, Major Bacon and others got into it. The Doctor commenced by saying that Major Bacon was rather hoarse from speaking so constantly for several days past, and requested the audience to be quiet, and hear the truth and nothing but the truth. It was the proudest moment of his life, etc., etc., introducing Major Bacon of Bibb. The Major commenced by thanking his friends for the cordial reception, flattering introduction, etc., and commenced his regular set speech that he has been speaking over the state. Dwelling for some time on the sale of the state road, saying that he was opposed to it, because it would increase taxation from our public school fund, favors its lease only to our own citizens, who are amenable to our laws; said the conditions of the lease had been violated. He then paid his respects to General Gordon because he resigned his place in the senate, and gave his idea of what a person should be to seek the high position of governor of Georgia, to which all agreed. Sought to prove that General Gordon would not do to be entrusted with this great responsibilty, but failed to convince the crowd. Near the conclusion of his address several questions were asked him to which he answered.

Captain B. H. Napier asked him: "Did you sign a written pledge during the convention of 1883 to reappoint J. W. Nelms keeper of the penitentiary if you were elected, and was this not done while you were seeking an interview with Governor Brown?" He replied, "No! Now go to your masters and get some more questions." He then asked him in regard to the interview with Governor Brown. He replied that he "did not send for him. Brown did not know who did." "Did you not mean, Major Bacon, that Governor Smith was about to denounce you for this interview on the floor of the convention?" The major replied, "I have heard a great many things of Governor Smith, and I don't consider this a legitimate question. When you (pointing his finger at Captain Napier) lived in Macon were you known as Knapper or Napier? "That Major Bacon has nothing to do with this canvass no matter what I was called. I always do my duty, and it is more than I can say of you, at least during the war. When I got up to ask you those questions I expected to meet a gentleman. I was mistaken and I am done. In a few moments after he closed his speech, which has done him no good in this county as next Saturday will show.

FLOORED BY A QUESTION.

Major Bacon Thrown Off His Balance by a Young Attorney.

TALLAPOOSA, Ga., June 26.—[Special.]—Hon. A. O. Bacon was introduced by the Hon. J. M. McBride, with complimentary allusions to his tried record, and regretted very much that the speaker would be limited in his time.

Major Bacon then arose to address the people. He stated that he was sorry that he was limited in time, on account of his appointment at Forsyth. He opened his speech by referring to the railroad commission law, of which he pronounced himself in favor. He then spoke of the convict lease law, condemning it in its broadest terms.

Whereupon Colonel L. N. Mercier, a rising young lawyer of our town, arose in a very calm and deliberate manner, and inquired of the major: "Where were you, and what did you do when the convict lease law was enacted?"

In somewhat an excited manner he asked the colonel to be seated. In reply he said, with flashing eyes and reddened face, as if he was hunting for some vile sarcasm in order to avoid the answer to the legitimate question: "If you should live to be as old as Methuselah, I could answer any question that you could put to me."

Colonel Mercier, in reply, said: "Never mind Methuselah, and answer my question."

Bacon then said: "Sit down, and I will answer the question. I was in the legislature at that time. It was the best they could do. If my young friend had not had on such short clothes he would have asked no such a question."

Cries from the Bacon men—"Answer no questions."

At this juncture Major Bacon excused himself.

Is this the way for true Georgians to answer legitimate questions?

He made Gordon many votes.

We have the Gordon (not the typhoid) fever in this county.

GORDON AS A SOLDIER.

The Boys Still Stick to their Old Commander.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Junee 26.—Editors Constitution: In glancing over a Macon Ga., paper, I see that it is charged that General John B. Gordon depreciates the service of the private soldiers and the part they acted during the war. I was with General Gordon from the beginning of the war until the last gun was fired at Appomattox, as a private in Sixth Alabama regiment. Such an insinuation as above alluded to, is a slander on one of the grandest and most generous heroes that ever led an army. General Gordon, during the war and since, was always kind and generous to the private soldiers, and those who were with him will bear testimony to this everywhere.

During his stay in Montgomery some weeks since, a crowd of old veterans surrounded him and gave "three cheers" for the old hero. He lifted his hat and responded by proposing "three cheers" for the brave and gallant officers and privates who stood with him through the blood and carnage of the battlefield. The private soldiers of the army of northern Virginia will never cease to love and honor General John B. Gordon.

Yours Truly,
SIXTH ALABAMA.

RISES UP FOR GORDON.

An Old Soldier Bears Testimony to the General.

COVINGTON, Ga., June 26.—[Special.]—Mr. J. J. Wallace, an old soldier and resident of Newton county, who was in General Gordon's command, came into town today, and amid great cheering and applause from the Gordonites, declared that while during an engagement in the late southern war he was shot through the lungs, falling in the thick of the fight, and while writhing in the dust amid the tramp of horse's feet, every moment expecting to be crushed to death, General Gordon bravely came to his rescue, and dismounting his herse, placed his almost lifeless body in his own saddle and safely carried him away from all imminent danger, thereby saving his life. Mr. Wallace was very much enthused, and said he that he would undergo a thousand tortures rather than be afraid of voting for the gallant general.

Bacon in Buchanan.

BUCHANAN, Ga., June 26.—[Special.]—Major Bacon made about his usual speech here to 250 or 300 people. He spoke for three hours, taking about three-quarters of an hour on the State road. He opposed the convict system, but failed to show any better method. He disclaimed any intention to slander General Gordon, or accuse him of selling out his seat in the senate, and then labored for an hour to convince the people there was a bargain and sale. While he did not say there was a bargain and sale direct, he used the strongest language he could to convey that idea. Taking his speech altogether, it was a disappointment. He left here to speak at Tallapoosa, but only spoke there about 25 minutes, when he had to leave on the train.

The "Dockyments" Sent Back.

LEXINGTON, Ga., June 26.—[Special.]—The editor of the Banner-Watchman sent a large bundle of his Bacon paper to Mr. Joseph Glenn of Simson district, the largest in the county, for political reading. This most estimable gentleman, being a solid Gordon man, and a regular subscriber to THE CONSTITUTION, opened said bundle, and on glancing over one copy, picked up his copy of THE CONSTITUTION and enclosed it in said bundle of Banner-Watchmans and returned to the editor. So much for the influence exerted by the Bacon organs.

Old soldiers, (he being one) does not believe the slanderous epithets hurled at the gallant Gordon.

Watch old Oglethorpe on the day of election.

THE FARMERS WANT GORDON.

The Vote in Jefferson County Will Stand Two to One for Gordon.

BARTOW, Jefferson county, June 26.—Editors Constitution: Our county is strong for General Gordon for governor. Bacon men say they can't see it in this way. Let every one who desires to know the sentiment of the people on that subject start out and ask every voting man he meets how he stands on the gubernatorial question. If he will act fairly and squarely and don't find two for Gordon where he finds only one for Bacon, then let him call on me for a hat. To canvass the little town only, the Gordon cause is not so strong, but when you strike out in the backwoods, among the sturdy old farmers, two to one don't express it. If there is anything like fairness in our mass meeting on the 6th of July, our county will send Gordon delegates to the state convention. One of the best signs of Major Bacon's standing in our county, is, that some of his strongest advocates, those that have been battling for him, before he announced himself. Now say, they don't want either Bacon or Gordon. The cry is, throw both away and take a dark horse. Some of the Bacon men have tried very hard to delude those who don't have advantage of daily papers, about some great railroad scheme that General Gordon has been mixed up in, to swindle the government out of millions of dollars. But your explanation of the Scott and Huntingdon affair has set them right. I heard one of our most solid and best citizens say a few days ago that he was a Bacon man, entirely because he did not understand that great railroad scheme, that Gordon advocated. He was ledito believe that General Gordon was a traitor to his country, but now, since that question was cleared up in his mind, and he saw that Gordon was on the right side, he declared himself for General Gordon. And thus it is, many are deluded by not seeing any further into these slanders reported by such Rev. Slanderers as Dr. Felton, than their reports enlighten them. Rely upon it, General Gordon has got many strong friends in Jefferson county: not only strong, but men of influence—men who don't meddle in politics much: but on this occasion, when they hear the name of their dear old commander slandered, they rouse up, shake off the dust that has been settling down on them ever since peace was declared, throw off their coats and gone into politics once more, just for the sake of him whom they love so dearly as a brave man. If Major Bacon will just continue to recognize Dr. Felton as a leader for him we don't want any better advocate for the cause of Gordon. We have not had the doctor with us in this section. Please tell him to come down, that we have a few Bacon men here, and would be very glad for him to talk to them. Though it is not necessary for him to come, as there are a few country weeklies that are doing the work very well by reporting what he says so faithfully.

DEMOCRAT.

Delegates to the State Convention.

GREENSBORO, Ga., June 26.—[Special.]—The friends of Hon. Seaborn Reese, successful candidate in this county for re-election to congress from the eighth district, and the friends of General Gordon, met at the courthouse to choose delegates to the different conventions.

At the Reese meeting a resolution was introduced and unanimously carried, condemning the recent action of the executive committee in changing the basis of representation for this district, defining it as a usurpation of power not delegated to them, without authority and a nullity. The meeting sends up a strong and able delegation to Athens as follows: Judge W. M. Weaver, Hon. H. T. Lewis, Judge C. Heard, Dr. A. A. Jernigan, Judge W. W. Moore, Mr. A. P. Rainwater, Mr. W. O. Sanders, Mr. Joe Davison.

The Gordon delegates to the gubernatorial convention are Judge W. M. Weaver, John W. Wright, Jas. T. Gresham, J. D. Anderson, J. O. Boswell, J. V. McWhorter, D. W. A. Moore, A. S. Lundy, W. A. Reynolds, W. H. Stovall, A. L. Kimbrough, Dr. J. L. Durham, Bartow Florence, J. S. O'Neal, Charles B. Mitchell. They go there to freeze for Gordon. The delegates were instructed to also vote for the present state house officers.

GORDON IN JEFFERSON.

The People Urge Him on With Cheers and Unbounded Enthusiasm.

LOUISVILLE, Ga., June 26.—[Special.]—In accordance with the notice given to the people of Jefferson county, on Wednesday the 23d instant, a large and enthusiastic crowd assembled in Louisville to meet and to hear General Gordon.

After a few hours' delay, caused by an accident on the Wrightsville and Danville railroad, General Gordon made his appearance on the stand in the town of Louisville. The citizens of the town had notice of the delay, and on account of the anxiety of the enthusiastic crowd, the suspense was tenfold. The people of old Jefferson had arranged to make the proper demonstration of regard and esteem for one so patriotic, so noble and so brave as General Gordon and he was received at Wadley by a large crowd from this place, accompanied by the Louisville brass band, and bearing banners of the union and confederacy, containing the red, white and blue, emblems so much loved by the southern people. On his arrival at the depot in Louisville, he was met by a large portion of the crowd with a handsomely decorated carriage drawn by six handsome white horses. A large crowd had assembled at the depot, and on the appearance of General Gordon, he was cheered by the people, and the woods for a distance around the depot echoed with hurrahs for Gordon, and told of the warm reception given to Georgia's statesman and soldier.

The kind and patriotic ladies of Louisville, as a labor of love to them, had lost no time in decorating in the most beautiful manner with flowers and garlands the stand upon which General Gordon spoke. Upon General Gordon's arrival at the stand in his beautifully decorated carriage accompanied by an escort of prominent citizens, the interest and enthusiasm displayed by the people of both sexes was wild and intense. General Gordon was introduced by Mr. W. L. Phillipps in an eloquent address which told of the exploits of the old hero, his distinguished and patriotic services as a statesman, and the exhalted position he had always occupied in the esteem and affection of the southern people.

General Gordon arose before an audience of about one thousand people, and in a clear and distinct voice addressed them for about two hours. His speech contained none of the slang and slander as reported by opposition journals in other places, but was a statement of true facts, showing to the people of Jefferson county that he dealt fairly with his opponent. General Gordon fully vindicated himself against the charges which are reported in the organs of the opposition, and demonstrated conclusively that he was still worthy of the confidence, esteem and support of the people. General Gordon showed that if he was now supported by Senator Joseph E. Brown, that he was not the only one who had desired that distinguished gentleman's support, but that a few years ago, in the contest for the gubernatorial nomination between Boynton and someone else, that someone else sent for Joseph, and, in a room all alone, appealed in the most affectionate manner to Joe to admit him into the ring and rescue him from mortification and defeat.

This was General Gordon's first appearance in Jefferson county, and by his pleasant manner and eloquent address not only strengthened and advanced his course, but really captivated the people of Jefferson. Many of his old comrades in arms who served under him were here to meet him, and were delighted to meet once more their brave old commander.

General Gordon went from here to Pope Hill, in this county, and there, at four o'clock in the evening, addressed a large and enthussastic meeting of the people. We think, beyond all doubt, that you can put old Jefferson down in the Gordon column.

Wants a Change of Diet.

AUGUSTA, Ga., June 23.—Editor Atlanta Constitution—Dear sir: I need a change of diet, and that badly. My bill-of-fare for some time past has been Bacon at breakfast, Bacon at dinner and the whole hog for supper, in the shape of the Augusta Chronicle. Such a greasy mixture has acted like a dose of tartar emetic, and I come to you for relief. Inclosed you will find postage stamp to pay for a copy of the most conservative and ably edited paper in the south—THE ATLANTA CONSTITUTION. When I read the truth of the progress of the present campaign to be found in your columns I will hand it to a friend, saying, "Pass it to the next Gordon man." Anti-Gordon men may say what they will, but I believe the gallant General John B. Gordon has ever acted up to his honest convictions of truth, right and justice, and when he takes the seat in the governor's mansion (as he most assuredly will) it can then be said the right man is in the right place. Do hurry up the said copy as I feel returning nausea.

Yours truly, A. S. DANFORTH.

How Bacon News is Manufactured.

GIBSON, Ga., June 26.—[Special.]—A special from this place to the Augusta Chronicle contains a report of the speaking here. It eulogizes the speech of Colonel Tutt which had not been made when the mail train which carried this special left here. As the special was gotten up by some "smart Alec" of a Bacon man who reported what had happened before it did happen, we send this to have the truth appear. It was stated that the speech of Colonel Tutt turned many votes from Gordon to Bacon. Take it for what it is worth, but it is time these "soon" men had a damper thrown on their wild movements. This is certainly a case where a pure Bacon man was a little too previous.

Instructed for Carlton.

ATHENS, Ga., June 26.—[Special.]—The congressional mass meeting elected delegates uninstructed for H. H. Carlton. It was the largest mass meeting ever held in the county.

Will Vote for Gordon.

COLUMBUS, Ga., June 26.—[Special.]—The executive committee of Chattahoochee county today ordered a primary election for the 6th of July to elect congressional delegates.

Baldwin Will Come to Gordon.

MILLEDGEVILLE, Ga., June 26.—[Special.]—An enthusiastic meeting of Gordon men was held here today. A large Gordon club was organized.

DEATH OF DAVID DAVIS.

The Last Moments of the Ex-Vice President—His Funeral.

BLOOMINGTON, Ill., June 26.—David Davis died at six o'clock this morning. He sank into a comatose state twelve hours before the end and passed painlessly away, surrounded by his family. During the early part of last evening he appeared to be failing, and it was felt certain that he could not live through the night. At eleven o'clock he revived somewhat and was given milk and stimulants in small quantities. The effect was worse, however, for he at once relapsed into a comatose condition, his pulse becoming very feeble. During the succeeding three hours he failed gradually, his respiration growing noticeably weaker until the end came.

The cause of Judge Davis's death was Bright's disease of the kidneys, aggravated by a weakened condition of the system, dating from the time when he became afflicted with the carbuncle. His last hours were calm and peaceful. The funeral will be held next Tuesday at 3 o'clock. The remains will be buried in Bloomington cemetery.

The following gentlemen have been invited to act as honorary pallbearers: Judge Walter Q. Gresham, Judge Lawrence Wilson, Hon. Leonard Sweet, Governor Oglesby, Hon. Jos. E. McDonald, Judge John M. Scott, Hon. Clayton H. Moore, Colonel R. B. Latham, Hon. Jesse W. Fell, Hon. John Wentworth, Judge Oliver L. Davis, Judge Thomas Drummond, Hon. D. W. Voorhees, Hon. John A. Logan, A. A. Treatt and W. D. Griswold.

The following were invited as acting pallbearers: Hon. Robert T. Lincoln, Hon. A. E. Stevenson, James P. Ewing, Lyman Burr, Frank D. Orme, Duncan L. Fulk, Henry W. Bishop, Lucius G. Fisher.

The death is received in Bloomington with profound sorrow. Flags are at half-mast, bells tolling and stores and houses dressed in mourning.

The end was peaceful and without a struggle. Judge Davis's physician says the immediate cause of his death was erysipelas, the outcome of a malignant carbuncle, which first appeared on April 30, but that diabetes which must have been insiduously working for two years was the primary cause, and to it attributed his rapidly declining in flesh. For a week before the end he had been unconscious most of the time.

A COTTON SWINDLE.

How an Arkansas Cotton Buyer Netted $35,000.

ST. LOUIS, June 26.—One of the biggest cotton swindles on record has just been successfully executed in this market. It was worked by a buyer who formerly had headquarters in Hope, Arkansas, but now doe business from Tevarkana, Texas. About a month ago he arranged the sale of 3,000 bales of good middling from Texarkana to eastern buyers, sending samples from that place. He requested the privilege of shipping from St. Louis, as he could make better freight arrangements. Having secured the cotton a shade under the market, eastern parties readily gave him permission to forward the cotton in that way. Having secured buyers' consent for that purpose the Texan came here, and bought recklessly all low, sandy and stained cotton he could find until he had filled his orders. The cotton was shipped and drafts paid on samples sent from Texarkana, through arrangements made with the Texarkana banks and their St. Louis corresponpents. His excess of profits are estimated at $35,000.

A WORTHLESS HUSBAND

Shoots His Wife, Who is Working for Herself and Child.

BALTIMORE, Md., June 26.—This morning Mrs. Ella Forsyth, who is employed in a printing office, at No 18 North street, went to her work as usual, and when she was ascending the stairs, her husband, George O. Forsyth, ran to the door and fired two shots from a pistol at her. As soon as she fell, her husband turned the weapon toward himself and fired once, the ball passing through his heart, killing him instantly. Mrs. Forsyth is dangerously wounded. She is represented as a very industrious woman and was working for the support of herself and child, the father having failed to provide for them. He has kept a low groggery since he abandoned his family. Forsyth was twenty-one years old, and his wife twenty-one. They had been married two years. He had expressed his determination to kill both her and himself, and was accompanied by one of his friends this morning on his mission of death. Frank Vousant was arested today, as an accessory to the shooting of Mrs. Forsyth.

Mahone and His Men.

WASHINGTON, June 26.—Senator Mahone had the republican state committee of Virginia, assembled in his committee room at the capitol yesterday and held a long conference in regard to the coming campaign in his state.

RACE OF THE ENGINES.

AN EXCITING SCENE ON THE LAKE SHORE ROAD.

Crowds of Strikers Overturn Cars on the Track to Stop Trains from Being Run—The Tracks Cleared, a Train is Started, and a Fight Ensues Between the Parties.

CHICAGO, June 26—Shortly after the Lake Shore strikers blockaded the tracks last night by throwing a lot of empty cars across from the Rock Island tracks, the night express, consisting of eleven coaches, and carrying the United States mail, ran down the west bound track but finding the track blocked, ran back, and was switched on the east bound track at the rate of about eight miles per hour. At Fifty-first street, just before the train reached the switch a man ran out and turned the switch as the train came along. The locomotive immediately jumped the track, carrying the tender and forward truck of the first coach off with it. For a minute there was a terrible jarring and knocking about, and the train came to a standstill. The locomotive had run over bare ties for more than a hundred feet and finally, pushing two of them apart, sank into the mud. The lever was reversed and efforts made to back upon the track, but without success. The engineer of the express, although not suspecting that a fiendish attempt would be made upon his train, nevertheless, went only at half speed, and by doing so probably prevented a most serious wreck and a great loss of life. In the meantime, in trying to get the freight train on the track, the east bound track became blocked and it was some time before a Rock island dummy could approach from behind. Finally the freight cars were placed on the track and the dummy able to reach the last coach of the express. A heavy rope was fastened between them and after a half hour's work, the locomotive, tender and coach were again placed on the rails. The cars and engine were examined, and after being found not to have been injured by the accident, again started on their journey, being about an hour and a half late. The engineer of the train and several others saw the man who turned the switch, and are certain they could identify him if they could see him again. The switchmen declare they know nothing about it; in fact, several of them insisted in placing the train in order again, no further attempt was made after this to get afreight train out.

The railroad company was engaged this morning in endeavoring to clear the tracks on South Forty-third street of the wrecked trains which remained their over night. Nearly all the track from 43d to 55th streets was blocked this morning with partially overturned cars. Traffic on both the Lake Shore and Rock Island railroad was delayed in bonsequence. By ten o'clock the tracks had been pretty thoroughly cleared, During the night the roundhouses and other property of the Lake Shore was guarded bp Pinkerton's police and members of the town of Lake police force. A Lake Shore engine, in charge of a regular crew, left the roundhouse shortly after 12 o'clock. Two cabooses were attached to it. On each caboose were about fifteen town of Lake police and twenty Pinkerton's men. The train proceeded at a rate no faster than a walk until its arrival in Englewood, where the officers mounted the cow-catchers of both engines and of cabooses, and the train started off at the rate of two miles an hour. A crowd of strikers had rushed ahead of the train while it was proceeding at a slow rate and at a dead ran set out for Englewood. As the train's speed was accelerated the crowd was soon passed and a storm of stones and cinders were thrown at the men on the outside of the engines and cabooses. A cry of rage went up from the throats of the mob as the engines dashed by. Soon the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul engine and one belonging to the Nickel Plate road passed a crowd of strikers. The engines were on their way to Englewood yards to do some switching for the roads to which they belonged, but as they passed the crowd they were boarded by 100 furious men, who, without ceremony, took undisputed possession. Then began one of the most exciting races on record, the pursuing and pursued some times ran at the rate of fifty miles an hour. Matt Pinkerton stood on the rear platform of the train and threatened the men on the pursuing engines with his revolver, but without effect. The pursuing engine arrived within a few feet of the caboose when the town of Lake police jumped inside and closed and locked the door behind them, leaving Matt Pinkerton and three of his men with newspaper reporters on the rear platform. Huge lumps of coal sailed through the air, followed by three or four coupling pins and a Pinkerton man fell headlong from the platform. "Crack! crack!" went Matt Pinkerton's revolver and a striker fell off the engino. The strikers jumped like sheep, with the exception of a dozen men, at the first fire. Possibly the others gave signals to the engineer to go ahead. Another shower of stones which smashed the windows of the caboose without doing serious damage to any one on the platform and more revolver shots, also apparently without effect, were fired by the officers, and just then the pursuing engines caught up to and coupled on the Lake Shore train. The strikers' engines were reversed and the coupling pins snapped like so many pieces of glass. The Lake Shore train was stopped just as the engine approached at a full head of steam and struck the rear caboose a blow that threw the then thoroughly frightened policemen to the floor and shivered every pane of glass in the cars. The police left the dangerous ground, and held a parley with the strikers, the result of which was that four engines and two cabooses were pulled back to the Root street crossing. On the caboose besides the police were General Freight Agent Blodgett, Superintendent Amsden and Yard Master Jones, returning with the captured caboose and engines, the crowd overturned several box cars on the tracks blocking the two main tracks. The crowd along the tracks threw stones and other missels through the windows of the caboose. Persons inside sought refuge under tables and benches and escaped serious injury. On arrival at Forty-first street they were hailed with cheers by a great crowd of strikers and their sympathizers assembled there. The engine went into the roundhouse, leaving the caboose on a side track.

Accounts vary as to the effect of the detectives' fire upon the pursuing strikers, There seems no room for doubt that some strikers were shot. The police and detectives suffered no injury beyond a few slight bruises.

The net result of the struggle today was one train of freight forwarded to Elkhart and one other train brought into the city. About 25 of the strikers and their friends who gave chase to the outgoing freight are spending the night in Hyde park and Englewood jails.

THE TRIAL OF ELLIS.

An Effort to Clear Him on the Ground of Insanity.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., June 26.—[Special.]—The trial of Thomas W. Ellis for the murder of Clara Ross, a woman of the town, was begun in the circuit court yesterday. The defendant plead not guilty and the line of defense is insanity.

A large amount of expert testimony will be introduced to prove that Ellis has not been of sound mind for several years.

Ellis is the coolest man in the courtroom and pays no attention to the proceedings. While the jury was being drawn he sat with his back to the jury box, and did not even glance at the faces of the jurors.

While the witnesses were telling the details of the crime, Ellis smoked a cigarett and not a muscle of his face moved.

Thomas W. Ellis is the son of a Methodist minister and from boyhood has been eccentric and of a very nervous temperament. He has made several attempts to commit suicide.

He came to this city over a year ago and worked for awhile as reporter on the Evening Chronicle, and several months ago he started a small weekly sensational paper called the Hornet, which brought him considerable notoriety.

STORY OF THE CRIME.

About the time Ellis started his paper he became infatuated with a woman of the town named Clara Ross, and spent most of his time at her room, having his meals sent there, and once when the woman was sick he missed an issue of his paper to devote his entire time to the woman.

On the night of the 21st of April, Ellis went to the house of Jennie Dukes, where Clara Ross was staying and found another man in her room. The woman came to the door and asked Ellis to wait a moment. She then let the other man out at the back door and admitted Ellis, who immediately locked the door and began to curse and abuse the woman. When they had been in the room about half an hour two pistol shots were fired in quick succession. At the first shot the woman screamed, "Oh, Lord!" After the shooting Ellis went to the Florence hotel and asked the night clerk to call a policeman, saying that he had killed a woman and must go to jail. He walked across the office several times, then stopped, and, drawing a pistol, said, "I might as well end this at once." Mr. George Clower, the clerk, caught the pistol in time to save Ellis's life.

When the police entered the woman's room they found her lying under the bed dead. The ball entered the back of her head at the base of the brain.

The funeral procession of the dead woman passed the jail next day, and Ellis made frantic appeals to be allowed to see her face once more, and raved like a madman when refused.

Ellis refused to give any reason for the killing and said he would make no defense and did not care what was done with him. He is not quite twenty-one years of age.

COLUMBUS CHRONICLES.

Judge Brooks Calls In An Order For An Election—Other Notes.

COLUMBUS, Ga., June 26.—[Special.]—Judge Brooks has called in the order for an election on the 13th of July, for county treasurer to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Mr. Tim Markham. An examination of the law showed that an election could not be held to fill the vacancy, within less time than six months before the time for the next regular election, as the time fixed for the special election was not quite six months before the regular election, the order has been revoked, and Judge W. B. Brannan appointed temporary treasurer.

Work on the Georgia Midland and Gulf railroad is progressing rapidly. A force is now at work north of Shiloh.

In a match game of ball today, the Amateurs defeated the Eagle and Phenix by a score of 4 to 2. It was a close, exciting game.

Captain Roaul, president of the Central railroad, was in the city today, and confirmed the statement that the Columbus and Western railroad is to be extended to Birmingham at once. The surveying corpse is in the field, and the grading will begin as soon as the route is located.

In the clay pigeon shooting this afternoon C. R. Chapman, of Americus, broke nine out of twelve, and Jesse Beard eight. The closing exercises of Wynnton academy took place yesterday. The prizes for declamation were awarded to J. H. Dimon and Louis Garred. The school is in charge of Professor W. E. Murphey.

Watermelons of the new crop are being offered on the street here.

UNCLE TOM'S CABIN.

A Young Englishman's Experience With the Negroes.

DARIEN, Ga., June 26.—[Special.]—In a conversation yesterday a young Englishman, who has spent the last six years in the southern states, enunciated some conclusions which, if not original, are yet strikingly truthful.

"Speaking about works of fiction," he said, "and their influence on public thought and conviction Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe's 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' has beyond doubt moulded more wide spread and false ideas as to the condition of the negro, and the relations existing between the two races in the south than any other work yet published.

"Just imagine the people of the whole European continent being deluded into such false and ridiculous convictions by the workings of one active little brain.

"From the literary merits of the work it may have many good influences, but when we consider the fact that it is translated into every European language, found with very few exceptions in every European home, and held forth to each growing generation as a work of superlative excellence, then first can we realize the extent of what may be justly termed the sentimental fraud.

"When I first came here," he continued, "my mind was completely imbued with the fervid sentiment of 'Uncle Tom's Cabin.' I had seen few, if any, negroes before. I engaged to wait on me an old man whose woolly beard was streaked with silver, and tried hard to convince myself that he was the prototype of Mrs. Stowe's hero. In this I certainly would have succeeded had he extended the least encouragement. But one gold button after another, and other valuables, disappeared with such alarming rapidity that at last I determined to watch the imaginary paragon of excellence. I caught him, forgave him, caught him again, engaged half a dozen others, but, alas, nowhere could one be found that even resembled the shadow of the one I so fondly cherished.

"I heartily hated a man who had his boots pulled up over his pants or a whip in his hand. You ask why? Because such had been pictured in vivid colors the overseer. He who lashed the helpless old negro and kicked the negroes and the little children.

"One estimable person here, a rice planter, impressed himself on my mind as the one whose many cruel deeds often had made my tears flow while reading Uncle Tom's Cabin.

"I instinctively abhored him until experience taught me that he was the very essence of kindness; and thus my mind was gradually disabused of the many prejudices created by a perusal of this popular book."

TWO CHILDREN ASTRAY.

They Make a Round Trip of Over a Thousand Miles.

TOCCOA, Ga., June 26.—[Special.]—On Wednesday morning Joe and Davie Ellerson, of Elberton, aged eight and eleven years, started from Covington, Ga., to their home. They changed cars in Atlanta and boarded the Richmond and Danville passenger train, which goes through to Washington, D. C., without change. They failed to change here for Elberton, but stayed on the Richmond and Danville train all day and all night, arriving in Washington city Thursday morning at 8:30 o'clock. They came back this morning on the 10 o'clock train and left for Elberton this evening, having made a trip of over a thousand miles in perfect safety by themselves.

To Hang on the 10th of July.

FORT GAINES, June 25.—[Special.]—Isabella Roney, under sentence of lifetime imprisonment in the penitentiary for complicity in the murder of Marion Millirons last August, was taken by a guard this morning to the convict camp at Old Town, in Jefferson county. Willis Hudson, under sentence of death for the same crime, who has heretofore appeared indifferent to his fate, seemed much affected by the separation from his sister. His time on earth is short, as he is to be hanged on the 10th of July.

To Go by Cedar Shoals.

COVINGTON, Ga., June 26.—[Special.]—O. S. Porter, owner of the Cedar Shoals sein cord and cotton factories, has gone to New York with the view of contracting with the Georgia Midland authorities to arrange to bring that road by way of Cedar Shoals and Covington. He says he is confident of success. The Georgia Midland has completed the survey from Locust Grove to Covington. Major Green, the chief engineer, is expected here tomorrow in interest of the road. The Covington and Macon have completed the survey to Covington. Two surveying corpses are at present locating at Gather's Mills, a point eight miles below Covington. We are confident of this road and have the assurance of President Livingston.

The Union Point Academy.

UNION POINT, Ga., June 26.—[Special.]—The closing exercises of the Union Point academy came off last night. On account of the threatening weather, the crowd was not as large as expected. But all who came were more than repaid for their trouble.

Riding Over the New Road.

ATHENS, Ga., June 26.—[Special.]—Mr. Robeson, engineer of the Macon and Athens railroad, was in Athens yesterday, riding over the line of the new railroad.

LUCY COHEN ACQUITTED.

LUCY COHEN ACQUITTED IN THE UNITED STATES COURT.

Fine Cotton—Centenary Festival—Eddie Holmes Dead—The Road Commissioners—Struck by Lightning—Has a Fit—Dots and Dashes—Personal and Other Mention.

MACON, Ga., June 26.—[Special.]—The case of Annie Ryan vs. Lucy Cohen, charged with embezzling a money order, was resumed this morning.

It seems that some time last year, Lucy Cohen received a money order addressed to Annie Ryan. Annie Ryan charged Lucy Cohen with breaking open her letter, and thus brought it before the United States court yesterday. But it seems that Annie was mistaken, that Lucy did not break open her letter, as was proved by the evidence, and hence she was acquitted this morning. Several witnesses were sworn, some of whom were from Atlanta.

Amateur Artist.

MACON, Ga., June 26.—[Special.]—Macon can boast of some fine amateur artists. Miss Mattie Jones, of East Macon, a graduate of Wesleyan, handles the pencil and brush with the skill of a master. Her latest work is a pair of fruit pieces, "grapes" and "cherries," painted on polished maple wood and both are very beautiful. Miss Mattie has painted quite a number of fine pieces, among which her "Italian scene" shows a delicacy of touch that is remarkable. "The Stag at Bay" is wonderfully realistic, and several beautiful panels on ebony grace the walls of her parlor and sitting room.

Fine Cotton.

MACON, Ga., June 26.—[Special.]—Dr. J. G. McCreary combines the duties of his profession and his aldermanic affairs with a little nice farming. From his fifty acre cotton field, five miles from town, he brought to the city an average stalk which is over two feet high, and fairly loaded with squares. From this sample it is the boss cotton patch in this region, and will doubtless turn out a fine yield of the fleecy staple a little later on.

Centennary Festival.

MACON, Ga., June 26.—[Special.]—A festival will be given at Professor J. T. Dewy's residence on Chestnut street, one block from Tatnall square, on Thursday afternoon and evening next, for the benefit of Centennary church. The congregation are working away with a hearty good will and they deserve hearty encouragement.

Cash Basis.

MACON, Ga., June 26.—[Special.]—After careful consideration of the matter, T. C Parker & Co. have decided that after Monday next they will sell goods for cash only, and thus save the expense of bookkeeping and bill collecting. They are desirious to retain all of their numerous customers, and they trust that the movement will meet with their approval.

Eddie Holmes Dead.

MACON, Ga., June 26.—[Special.]—Eddie Holmes, the bright and promising son of Mr. Charles Holmes, died at his father's home in Vineville last night after a short illness of two days.

What killed the little fellow is not definitely known by the physicans. Drs. Holt and McHatton were with him during yesterday evening and at the time he died. He was stricken Thursday evening with something like cramp colic, and left his place of business at Hize & Mansfield's, where he had been connected for the past few months. He was a bright boy, and his death is quite a sad one. The bereaved parents have the sympathies of many friends.

Struck by Lightning.

MACON, Ga., June 26.—[Special.]—Yesterday Mr. W. R. Pierce, of Twiggs county, came into the city and carried the remnants of a clock to Williams & Stevens to be mended. Mr. Pierce stated that on Thursday he had gone to the polls to vote (for Bacon) and his wife was also absent from home. When they returned and entered the house they were astonished to see pieces of the clock scattered all over the room. It had been raining and the lightning came down the chimney, tearing the wooden portions of the large clock sitting on the mantlepiece to fragments. The brass, steel and iron about the clock was badly burned, the pendulum and several other parts being burned in two. The clock was hopelessly destroyed.

Personal.

Major E. H. Ezell, Mrs. Ezell and Mrs. Mary Hodge, of Byron, spent the day in the city.

Miss Fannie Virgin left this morning for Montgomery, to spend a month with relatives.

Quite a crowd left this morning for Clinton, Jones county, to hear General Gordon speak.

Also a good crowd went up to Forsyth to the barbecue, and to hear Major Bacon address the citizens of Monroe county.

L. F. Carter, of Perry, is in the city.

Chancellor Mell, of Athens, is in the city, attending Mercer commencement.

Miss Alice Porter, of Americus, is in the city, visiting Mrs. J. E. Willett.

The Walnut Street social club enjoyed a party last evening at the residence of Mrs. Asher Ayers, the guests of Mrs. Sam Pearson.

Governor McDaniel spent last night at Brown's hotel, and left this morning for Thomasville, where he goes to attend the commencement exercises of the South Georgia agricultural college.

A WESTERN INCIDENT.

From the St. Louis Globe Democrat.

One of the rough-and-ready and desperate characters that have given the West its reputation for utter disregard of all law except that of the revolver, passed through St. Louis on his way to Castorville, Texas, last night in the custody of Sheriff Thurman, of Sherman county. He jumped from the train on which he arrived, and with the sheriff by his side wended his way to the waiting room through the crowd that nightly collects around the depot. He had not proceeded many steps before a sharp, metalic clank, clank, clank, attracted the attention of the bystanders. Following with their eyes the direction of the sound they saw around his ankles shackles of heavy iron that bound his feet together so closely that his step was short and difficult, and with each movement of the foot the chains gave forth the sound that proclaimed him a malefactor. Before he had reached the waiting-room he was surrounded by a crowd of men and women who, led by the prurient curiosity that seems to wield such complete sway over the majority of mankind, pushed and pulled to gain a standing place where they could see a man in irons. The prisoner was a typical westerner, tall and muscularly built, with broad shoulders and apparent strength of limb. His hair was as black as jet, his eye a soft brown, and his skin swarthy and tanned. He wore the accustomed sombrero and a suit of plain homespun, with high boots and a blue shirt. One might have examined and studied his countenance for any length of time, but suspicion of his true nature would never cross the mind.

A LURKING MENACE.

The softness of his eye, the pleasant, mild, even gentle, expression of his face, together with an air of frankness and openness that seemed to bespeak his character would deceive the most incredulous. One thing alone failed at times to preserve the innocence of his appearance, and that was a mouth that was marked by thin lips that now and then closed together with a firmness and decision that gave the lie to the other lineaments. Now and then, however, the lips parted with a smile that was pleasant, and the illusion was once more complete. Strangers observing him engaged with Sheriff Thurman would imagine that they were two innocent farmers who had come to the city to spend Sunday and see the city. Together they laughed and jested, and seemed to enjoy their trip immensely, but notwithstanding this the sheriff never took his eye off his attractive companion, for, although manacled, he had been through worse experiences before, and on every occasion left the officer to whom he was entrusted to complete his journey alone.

The interesting individual was none other than Bob Broadnax, known in the west as Jack Williams, and if he was asked his business, he would say that he was a live stock dealer. So he was at one time, but his dealings were of a shady nature that are not recognized by any board of trade. He was born in Western Texas thirty years ago. From his youth his life was spent among Indians, cowboys and Mexican herdsmen, but to civilized life he is a stranger. Spanish he could speak as fluently as he does his native tongue, and with many of the Indian tribes he could converse in their own dialects. His career for a number of years back has been marked by crime, and his name is known to the officers of the law from the Gulf of Mexico to the interior of Canada. The crime with which he now stands charged and for which he will be tried, is that of resisting an officer by the simple method of shooting him. Broadnax was accused of stealing horses from Texas ranchmen, and Sheriff Birull started out in search of him.

THE SHERIFF UNHORSED.

They met on the plains, and as soon as they came within ear-shot the sheriff ordered him to surrender. Broadnax refused, and Birull began firing. The first shot missed its mark, but the second struck the horse upon which Broadnax was mounted, bringing him to the ground. Finding himself at a disadvantage, the outlaw returned the fire of the sheriff with greater success, and succeeded in wounding the officer so badly that he fell from his horse. Broadnax then mounted the sheriff's horse and continued his journey to the north. On his way he was joined by one W. D. Smith, better known as Billy Smith, the stock inspector of Miles city, and together they drove a large number of horses to Montana and the Canadian line for sale. They had stopped in a settlement just within the border, and were disposing of their stock as rapidly as possible when rumors reached the neighborhood that Broadnax was a horsethief. Smith heard them and fearing that if it became known he would suffer with his partner, he informed officers of the true character, telling them at the same time to use all caution in attempting to arrest him, as he was a man without fear and accustomed to resort to desperate means when he thought it necessary. A posse of sixteen men was, therefore, summoned, and Smith led the way to where he knew Broadnax could be found. As soon as observed a volley was leveled, that only succeeded in killing under him the second horse within a few weeks.

FORTY TO ONE.

Drawing his revolvers he faced the posse, and presenting a determined front he backed to the house, which was but a short distance, firing an occasional shot as he went. By the time he had reached what he thought would be a place of safety the number of his pursuers had swelled to about forty. The house was surrounded and he was commanded to surrender. At first he refused, but, feeling that the odds of forty to one was more than he could overcome, and hearing threats of burning the house, he at last laid down his arms and gave himself up. The Texas authorities were at once notified and Sheriff Thurman dispatched to take him back. When this much of his story had been learned from his guardian the hero of the occasion was approached for some further account of his remarkable career. He was found at the lunch counter engaged in rapidly increasing the size of a pile of chicken bones that lay before him.

"Will you give me some account of your life?" was asked of him.

He looked a little surprised at first, and stared at his interlocutor for a moment and then a smile covered his face, and in a most amusing tone he exclaimed: "Well, if you haven't got cheek!"

A little coaxing, however, started a conversation, and the story is repeated as it was told before Sheriff Thurman, who nodded approvingly at different times.

A JAIL DELIVERY.

On the 4th of July, he said, he was arrested by Sheriff Cooper Wright and taken to San Antonio, where he was lodged in jail during the afternoon. He was not opposed to remaining in jail until after supper, for he was hungry, but that meal being finished, he began to long for liberty once more. He thought over various plans of escape and finally decided upon this one. Calling the sheriff to the cell he asked him to come in, as he wished to talk to him. Wright unlocked the door and entered the cell, pistol in hand. No sooner had he done so than Broadnax sprang for him and attempted to seize the pistol. He caught it by the tip of the barrel just as Wright pulled the trigger. The ball tore away a portion of the hand and a part of his index finger. Then, realizing that he must act quickly, he drew himself up and struck the sheriff a blow that felled him to the ground. Then, before he could rise, he took from his hands the pistol and key, and quickly stepping from the cell he locked the door, and thus exchanged places with his captor. The shot, however, had attracted attention outside, and before Broadnax had succeeded in getting far from the jail he received a load of buckshot in his back. Terribly wounded as he was he managed to make his escape to a point some distance out on the road, where he met a farmer with a wagon and team. At the point of the pistol he compelled the farmer to unhitch one of his horses, and bareback he rode sixty-five miles with eleven shot in his back and a mangled hand before he received medical assistance. During the New Orleans exposition he disguised himself as a dude, as he expressed it, and visited the exposition, meeting and talking with officers who would then and there have arrested him had they penetrated his disguise.

THE RIEL REBELLION.

During the Riel rebellion in Canada, Broadnax headed a band of about thirty cowpunchers, who went into the hostile country and followed up Riel's army, looting and plundering whatever could be found. He said that his expedition was not one of war but one for wealth, and the only fight in which he or his band participated was with another and similar band. This took place at Blue Gulch, and in the engagement forty-three men were wounded.

Broadnax is fond of criticising the people with whom he comes in contact, and is in no wise bashful about expressing his opinion. In speaking of Smith, his betrayer, his language was an artistic mingling of oaths that would have made an old-time steamboat mate blush with shame. He is loud, however, in his praises of Sheriff Thurman, and says that he is a brave, big hearted man, in spite of the facts that he handcuffs, manacles and chains him to the seat whenever he is in the car. He is confident that he will be acquitted when his trial comes off and on the whole is not dissatisfied with his trip.

A Change of Base.

CAVE SPRING, Ga., June 26.—[Special.]—Professor E. H. George, who has been associated with Rev. M. H. Lave as associate principal of Hearn school, leaves us, and will in future fill a tutor's place in Mercer university. Professor George is a young man of unusual promise, and we all rejoice with him over his promotion. He is a graduate of the above institution with first honor, after having taken both the junior and senior medals for English composition.

A Modest Editor Man.

From the Pocahontas, Va., Headlight.

We do not re-enter the theater of journalism as the trembling debutant, dazzled by the tinsel glitter of pictured scenes, nor assume its more sacred functions as the neophyte, whose swinging censer but deepens the awful mysteries of the sanctuary.

GEORGIA BREVETIES.

There has been much sickness in Macon county for the past month.

There is some talk of a new hotel being opened in Oglethorpe at an early day.

The closing exercises of the Lutheran school five miles from Oglethorge took place Friday.

Edwin Williams and wife left Oglethorpe Thursday for Atlanta, where they will spend a week with Mr. Harris, 91 East Ellis street.

B. A. Strange, of Ellaville, the treasurer of the Beuna Vista and Ellaville railroad, passed through Oglethorpe last week from Macon where he had been in the interest of his railroad.

TRADE S.S.S. FOR THE BLOOD MARK.

ECZEMA ERADICATED.

Gentlemen—It is due you to say that I think I am entirely well of eczema after having taken Swift's Specific. I have been troubled with it very little in my face since last spring. At the beginning of cold weather last fall it made a slight appearance, but went away and has never returned. S. S. S. no doubt broke it up; at least it put my system in good condition and I got well. It also benefited my wife greatly in case of sick headache, and made a perfect cure of a breaking out on my little three year old daughter last summer.

The Witnesses of To-Day.

We take pleasure in presenting to the readers of the Constitution the testimony of the following persons. We do not believe that any other medicine can bring forth indorsements of so high a character.

Mr. J. L. Burch, whose little daughter was relieved, is the well known and popular drummer for that excellent house, S. C. Dobbs, Athens, Ga.

Mrs. Fannie E. James is well known in Richmond county, and her case has been regarded as almost hopeless.

Mr. D. R. Mosely is an old merchant, but now retired to his farm, and known to the business community of North-East Ga. as one of the most reliable of men.

Dr. H. C. Edmunds, the druggist of Elberton, Ga., has a reputation second to none as a physician and citizen in all the land. The "Knights of the Grip" hold him in high esteem, as "mine host," and never fail to have a good word for him,

Mr. R. L. Lewis, a well known educator in South Carolina, and who is now postmaster at Central, in that state, makes a remarkable statement as to his cure, His well known integrity gives it weight and influence wherever he is known.

Rev, R. M. Pickens is the popular President of the Methodist Protestant conference of South Carolina—a man of learning and Christian character, which wins the confidence and admiration of all who come within the scope of his influence,

Athens, Ga., June 16, 1885.—The S. S. Company—Dear Sirs: My little daughter, at the age of five years, was afflicted with a very painful and disfiguring eruption on her face that baffled the skill of the physicians. I gave her Swift's Specific, and less than one bottle cured the disease entirely. Yours, etc., J. L. BURCH.

From a Grateful Heart.

Early in October, 1884, I was taken with inflammatory rheumatism, so that I was confined to my bed, and could not even move the toes on one of my feet. I could not bear to have my clothes changed or to be handled in anywise. With all the remedies administered I found no relief. A friend seeing the advertisement of S. S. S. as a rheumatic cure, secured some for me. This was in February, 1885, and after taking six small bottles, I noticed a change in the feeling of the limbs, and could turn over in bed almost without assistance or pain. After a dozen bottles had been used, I could walk on crutches. I am now able to walk without crutches, and do the cooking for a family of four and nearly all the housework.

MRS. FANNIE E. JAMES.

Hephzebiah, Richmond County, Ga., June 21, 1886.

A Postmaster's Statement.

About three years ago, there came upon me a feeling of general debility, accompanied with loss of appotite and energy. Eventually rheumatism attacked me in my shoulders and arms which so disabled me that I could not dress myself. Finally I had to give up my school. I was then engaged in teaching. The physicians tried various prescriptions, but failed to bring me relief. In fact, some of them seemed to be at a loss to make a diagnosis of my case. The disease finally settled in my right hip and leg, and produced lumps under the skin and swelling of the limb, especially at the ankle, that I could not rest at night or walk except with a crutch. Previously I had been a man of fine phsique and strong constitution. Various remedies were tried, but no permanent relief followed and they were abandoned. Seeing a certificate of a case similar to mine that had been cured by Swift's Specific, I concluded to try it. I commenced to improve on the first bottle. Have taken of the large and small, twelve bottles, and am glad to say that I have been entirely relieved, and have not any symptom of the disease for more than twelve months. I recommend Swift's Specific to all my friends.

Only One of a Thousand.

NICHOLSON, Ga., June 15, 1886.—The Swift Specific Company—Gentlemen: About twenty-three years ago an itching sore appeared on my left leg, which eventually covered almost the entire surface from the knee to the ankle, The discharge of bloody water was continual, and I suffered the most intense pain for many years. I could not sleep scarcely at night and a greater portion of the time I could not walk except on crutches. In turn I used about all the salves, ointments, sarsaparillas and blood purifiers that I could hear of, and was treated by a number of physicians without obtaining relief. A passing commercial traveler advised me to try Swift's Specific. I finally did so. I have used only half dozen bottles, and my leg is sound again, and there is scarcely any sign of my terrible and long protracted affliction left. I can walk as well as ever, without the use of a cane even, and occasionally spend a day in plowing. My neighbors all knew of my affliction, and will join me in bearing witness to the great cure wrought by S. S. S.

D. R. MOSELY.

A Well Known Physician.

ELBERTON, GA., June 16th, 1886.

The Swift Specific Co.—Gentlemen: During the year 1876 I was attacked with articular rheumatism—the effect of exposure to dampness and night air. I exhausted all the remedies known to our profession, including iodide of potash in various combinations, wine of colchicum, fluid extract of poke root, and various other preparations, including a patent potash preparation. I was also treated for several years by a number of our best physicians, but obtained no permanent relief. For nearly a year I was confined almost continuously to my bed, and could not attend to business of any kind Being a practicing physician, I was somewhat prejudiced against patent medicines; but coming in contact with traveling salesmen almost every day, who with one accord recommended the S. S. S. to me, I finally concluded to try it. I commenced improving while using the first bottle, and when I had finished half dozen bottles, I was so much improved that I was able to walk about and attend to my business once more. I consider your Swift Specific the best tonic and alterative made, and I do not hesitate to prescribe it in all cases requiring a reliable blood purifier. Very truly yours,

H. C. EDMONDS, M.D.

From President Pickens.

GREENVILLE, S. C., June 21st, 1886.—Swift Specific Co.: Dear Sirs—About four years ago I was attacked with what the physicians pronounced Neuralgic Rheumatism, accompanied with erysipelas. My appetite failed me entirely, and I had an intermitting pulse and very irregular pulsations of the heart. A terrible pain soon came into my chest and shoulders, and I became so helpless that I could attend to no business at all. The pains were movable and would sometimes pass from one part of my body to another. Finally, the erysipelas broke out on my left hand and arm and produced much swelling. I was for eighteen months afflicted in this way, and of course used a great many kinds of medicine but dothing gave me relief. Friends finally persuaded me to try Swift's Specific, which I did. I noticed a decided improvement while taking the first bottle, I continued its use until I had taken about one dozen bottles when I found myself entirely recovered and no sign of the disease left except a stiffness in my hand, resulting from the erysipelas. While taking the medicine I gained on an average, two pounds of flesh per week. I think your S. S. S. a valuable medicine, and I frequently recommend it to the afflicted. Very truly yours,

R. M. PICKENS.

IN THE SCHOOLS.

Closing Exercises of Westminster High School.

WESTMINSTER, S. C., June 26.—[Special.]—With a proud heart Professor C. R. Doyle announced that the twenty-fifth day of June had arrived, that it was ten o'clock, and that the commencement exercises of the Westminster high school would begin. The new Baptist church was filled with an assemblage of the intelligent and interested citizens of the community, together with many strangers and friends, who looked beneficiently upon the occasion. The ladies, of course, in their fair summer costumes occupying much space and evolving much enthusiasm, ushers looked after the comfort of the visitors, and were kept busy in their attention to the audience. The rostrum and many of the occupants of the house was embowered in flowers, evergreens and grasses.

After a charming hymn by the choir, the Rev. J. H. Zimmerman offered an eloquent opening prayer. The exercises were exceedingly entertaining, consisting in the main of excellent music, recitations, compositions, delivering of extracts, and original speeches, which were well received and on which a further and more extended report will appear in the county papers.

The annual address before the school was delivered by the Hon. George Johnstone, of Newberry. The address was devoted to the literary capacity of women, and the glorious benefits of female education. It was a carefully prepared oration, beaming with brilliant thoughts and sentiments, and clad with most eloquent language.

The patrons of the school are highly pleased with the exercises of the day, strangers were favorably impressed and, no doubt the next term opening in the new commodious school building now under way will open with a large accession of pupils. The community is most happily blessed in the selection of Professor Doyle as principal of the school. He is a graduate of the South Carolina college, a gentleman of acknowledged ability, suberb capacity as an instructor of the young and above all a modest Christian gentleman. He has been assisted during the present term by Mrs. Fannie Puckett, a worthy lady, who possesses many of the qualifications of a successful teacher. With such a corps of instructors, a salubrious and healthy climate, situated in the beautiful Piedmont belt, the Westminster high school invites the attention of the public.

WEST END NOTES.

Mr. Allen P. Morgan is having a windmill erected on his premises on Lee street. His new residence, when completed, will be one of the prettiest in West End.

An effort will be made to have a postoffice established in West End. This is a much needed convenience to a large number of residents of West End and contiguous community.

A petition will be presented to the county commissioners to change the name of Black Hall militia district to West End district. This change will destroy an old landmark in the history that section, but the name will be far more appropriate and significant, in consideration of the conspicuous position West End holds in the district.

The Baptists and Presbyterians will unite in furnishing the school room recently occupied by Miss McDonald, corner of Oak and Ashby streets. They will use it for Sunday school and for other purposes looking to the convenience and accommodation of the many members and friends of the churches in West End.

The following is a list of the yearly roll of honor pupils in the West End academy, whose closing exercises occurred Thursday and Friday nights last. The roll of honor enhances those pupils on each grade who made an average of 95 per cent, or over during the year. First (or lowest) grade: Mary Howell, 9.76; Claude Wilson, 97; Evelyn Harris, 96. Second grade: Eva McGaughey, 98.4; Lucile Smith, 97.5; Jephtha Culver, 96; Robert Goodman, 95; Walter Reynolds, 95. Third grade: Albert Perdue, 96; Joe Swartz, 95.9; Ola Alford, 95; Joe Howard, 95. Fourth grade: Beulah Pickett, 98; Estelle Morris, 96; Edward Alfriend, 96. Fifth grade: Minnie Wilson, 97; Lucie Stanton, 96; Story Swartz, 96; Geo. McGaughey, 96; Lurline Warner, 96; Thomas Longine, 95. Sixth grade: Geo. Pickett, 98.5; Mary Howard, 98; Clement Kent, 97; Alex. Kent, 97; Gertrude Alford, 96; Alice Megee, 96; Jesse Culver, 95. Seventh grade: Howell McDaniel, 97; Arthur Wilson, 96; Clarence Caldwell, 96; Julian Harris, 95. Eighth grade: Hannie Frazier, 98.5; Adda Belle Denham, 98; Robert Blacknall, 97; Annie Bradford, 97; Laura Spilman, 96. Ninth (highest) grade: Annie Kent, 98.3; Fla Humphries, 98.2; Ben Pickett, 98.1; Thomas Kicklighter, 96.

One of the most remarkable features of the last night's entertainment by the pupils of West End academy, was the declamation of little Edward Alfriend. Though only ten years old, he delivered the address of Spartacus to the Gladiators with grace, power and marked effect. The writer has seen sophomores at the State university secure the medal for declamation on a rendition of this piece in a manner not more praiseworthy.

About one hundred and sixty persons had registered in Black Hall (West End) District when the registration office closed yesterday afternoon.

IT is work—not words—that counts!

IT's beyond argument now.

THE "spike-tail dude" got there, while the bob-tail slouch got left!

THE "spike tail dudes" seem to have been around pretty generally yesterday.

THE people got a lick at Gordon's slanderers yesterday and laid them out cold!

BILL TUTT is still following General Gordon. We trust Bill will not hurt the general!

THERE is one weed that won't thrive on the old red hills of Georgia, and that is slander.

WE hope the Macon Telegraph will not let anything crowd out its little table this morning.

GORDON lacks just sixty votes of a majority this morning. He ought to pick up twenty-five of those this week.

GOOD gracious! Oblige us by looking at the Macon Telegraph's little table this morning. It may be your last chance!

THE Macon Telegraph accuses the Gordon men in Greene county of passing counterfeit money. The votes on yesterday did not look much like counterfeits.

NOW look out for new slanders on Gordon. They will prove that he stole something or murdered somebody before the week is out. It is their only hold, and their hands are slipping.

STATESMAN WALSH, in yesterday's Chronicle, says: "Do you hear that roar? It is the voice of the people!" That is exactly right. It was the voice of the people that said, Gordon 46, Bacon 4!

BILL TUTT has canvassed for Bacon in Greene, Warren and Lincoln. Result, eight votes for Gordon, none for Bacon. Let the good work go on. We trust Mr. Tutt's activity will not diminish!

LET us all get to work now, and work hard for another week, and next Saturday we will have some more fun. Look out for uninstructed tickets. Vote for straight Gordon delegates, and we will be with you next Sunday again.

"THE heart of the people is in the highlands of Lincoln and Dade."—Augusta Chronicle of yesterday.

Of course the heart of the people is in the highlands of Dade and Lincoln. They both went for Gordon on yesterday, and that is where the popular heart is.

WE put Statesman Walsh on notice that there will be some brass bands abroad in Georgia this week. In Jefferson, Jackson county, it is possible that some of the incautious Gordon men may shoot off a cannon. Will some considerate patriot press cotton in the Statesman's sensitive ears?

GENERAL GORDON will pay a visit to his old friends in northeast Georgia this week, beginning with Elbert on Monday. We trust if any brass bands are brought out, that they will be requested to toot softly, for Statesman Walsh's hearing is very acute, and the brass band hurts his feelings.

REMEMBER when they abuse Gordon for voting against the Thurman funding bill, that Senator Hill voted for the same bill. It was because of his opposition to this bill that Dr. Felton said he was filled with shame and disgust for Mr. Hill. Hill and Gordon stood together shoulder to shoulder against the Thurman funding bill.

DOES not Statesman Walsh begin to understand that the people believe what he said about General Gordon four years ago, in preference to what he is saying about him now? Does he not realize, at least, that the people are not going to indorse slanders on a man that he told them four years ago was above the reach of slander? Mr. Walsh ought to pause and consider.

WHAT right had Pat Calhoun to go into Oconee county and attempt to instruct its honest voters?—Athens Banner.

Exactly the same right that Statesman Walsh had to go into Warren and Mr. Hanson into Clay, and "instruct their honest voters." With this difference: The voters of Oconee accepted what Mr. Calhoun said and voted for Gordon. The voters of Warren rejected Mr. Walsh's advice and voted against Bacon, and the voters of Clay, by three to one, rejected the advice of Mr. Hanson and voted for Gordon. That's the only difference we can think of just now. Others may occur to us later.

SINCE the publication of the interview with Colonel W. H. Hulsey some days ago, in which reference was made by him to the candidacy of Colonel George N. Lester for nomination as Attorney General, we have received numerous letters and communications urging Judge Lester's claims. None of these have been published, and because they have not, unjust criticisms have been indulged by his friends. We have not felt that the public interests required that we should advocate the claims of any one for this position, and hence did not publish the communications. We wish it understood, however, that it does not follow, because of this, that we are opposed to Judge Lester. He is an able lawyer and an honored citizen. He has worthily held positions of trust and distinction in both civil and military life, and deserves the confidence and esteem of the people of his state; and should the convention see fit to nominate him, we shall cheerfully and heartily support him.

A Word to Gordon Men.

The lesson of yesterday's glorious victory is — Work! Yesterday's victory was achieved by Work! Hard, earnest, enthusiastic, systematic Work! Yesterday's victory can be supplemented by a still more glorious victory on the 28th of July, if the Gordon men will keep at Work.

No cause is fatally lost except that one which is believed to be certainly won. Overconfidence loses more battles than any other cause. The Gordon men entered this fight against a trained opposition. Veterans in campaigning, and entrenched in every county in the state of Georgia, from the first skirmish in Lee to yesterday's battles in nineteen counties, the Gordon men have been victorious. Much of their success, of course, has been due to the amazing strength of their candidate. His very name has raised up thousands of followers throughout the state. The slanders that have been put upon him have raised ten thousand more. His eloquence and magnetism on the hustings have enthused his followers and increased his strength, but back of all this his victories, unparalleled in the history of this state, have been achieved by the earnest, dauntless and devoted work of the Gordon men in the several counties. It is this that has made victory possible. It is this alone that will make his election sure.

THE CONSTITUTION has not been boastful in this campaign. It has simply advised the friends of General Gordon that there was a fighting chance for their favorite, and urged them to—Work! This advice it repeats this morning—Work! If the Gordon men in those counties which have not yet acted, will show the same energy and courage, and ability, that has been shown by those in the counties that have already acted, there is no power on earth to prevent General Gordon's overwhelming nomination. In most of these counties there are but ten more days of work. Let every Gordon man agree that he will spare not an hour until the last vote is polled in his county, and the Gordon delegates elected. Let the Gordon men in those counties that have already acted, go to work on the edges of those counties that are yet to act. In short, let every Gordon man in Georgia, enthused as he may be by yesterday's victories, pledge himself this morning that he will go to work with redoubled zeal and energy, and keep up the lick until the last delegate in the last county has been elected, and the gallant Gordon is crowned with a triumph, the like of which no Georgian has ever known!

It Is Whose Ox is Gored.

The rage of the Bacon men at finding the little game they have been putting up on the people of Georgia for the past two years suddenly smashed, is leading them into the dirtiest bypaths of slander.

For example, Mr. Patrick Calhoun, a gentlemen of high character and ability, a close personal friend of General Gordon's, goes, at General Gordon's request, into Oconee county to meet and answer there the slanders that the Bacon men have sown ten deep over the county. Mr. Calhoun goes frankly and openly, announces his purpose, is welcomed by the people whom he addresses at every crossroads where he can find a crowd. Oconee county accepts the answer he makes to the slanders against Gordon and the people come out and rebuke them.

Immediately Mr. Calhoun is denounced as "a paid hireling of the ring," and it is distinctly charged that "his pay depends on his carrying the county," and that he is scattering the money of the ring through Oconee county, to whom his "very presence is an insult." Of course all this is false, and the men who wrote it knew it was false when they printed it. But it is part of the plan of the Bacon ringsters to vilify and slander every gentleman who dares to lift up his voice in opposition to their schemes. If Mr. Calhoun's presence in Oconee, where he did not spend, or cause to be spent, one single dollar, convicts him of being the "paid hireling" of General Gordon, why are not Statesman Walsh, who went to Warren (alas! alas!) and Taliaferro; and Mr. Hanson, who went to Clay and Laurens; and Bill Tutt, who went to Greene and Warren and Lincoln, all in Major Bacon's interest, the "paid hirelings" of Bacon? Why are Calhoun and Guerry and Cox and Glenn, who go into the counties in Gordon's interests, to be denounced as "a miserable gang of paid emissaries," while Walsh, Hanson and Tutt, who go into the counties in Bacon's interests, are patriots and Christian statesmen?

Mr. Calhoun, in being vilified and denounced for doing precisely for Gordon what Walsh and Hanson are praised for doing for Bacon, has the consolation of knowing that he is in the best of company. The gang that slanders him is part of the same crowd that slandered Ben Hill and Stephens, as we have shown in these columns; that has slandered McDaniel, Colquitt, Smith, Blandford, Brown, Clarke, and every gentleman who has dared to stand up in opposition to the demands of the Bacon ring, and that would slander tomorrow its best friend of today if he should be found in the ranks of those who oppose them. In its blind malice and disappointment it has but one rule—every man who favors Bacon is a gentleman; every man who opposes Bacon is a rascal. This is a classification that the people of Georgia will be very slow to accept and very sure to rebuke those who attempt to enforce it.

Friendly Facts.

Our lively little contemporary, the Albany News and Advertiser, has but one serious trouble in this world, and that is THE CONSTITUTION'S anti-free trade position. It weeps over us, wrestles with us, and even goes so far as to misrepresent us by giving an interpretative twist, so to speak, to some of the genial remarks it finds in these columns.

This, however, is not troublesome to THE CONSTITUTION. We enjoy our contemporary's efforts to such an extent that we are always ready to lift it over a ditch, or pull it out of a quagmire. Just at present, the News and Advertiser is struggling in a quagmire of its own manufacture, and THE CONSTITUTION feels impelled to pull it out. Some days ago, discussing the free trade movement which Statesman Morrison has been pushing in congress, THE CONSTITUTION took occasion to suggest that, in all probability, "some of the southern congressmen, who are careering around as free traders, will finally discover that they do not represent the democratic party of the south as it is now constituted."

This appears to be very puzzling to our Albany contemporary. It declares that it does not "know what is meant by the phrase, 'the democratic party as it is now constituted.'" This may be perfectly true, but there is no hidden meaning in the phrase. It means precisely what it says, and simply states a fact that is well known to those who are acquainted with the history of political parties.

The democratic party of the south is not today what it was before the war. The pressure of circumstances, the threatening complexion of the situation, the impending danger of negro rule, have compelled men of all shades of opoinion in the south to unite in an organization which calls itself the democratic party. There are thousands of men in Georgia today who were ardent followers of Henry Clay, who believe in the doctrines he enunciated. There are many thousands of voters in Georgia at this moment who are whigs by tradition.

It seems to us that the situation ought to be perfectly plain to any one, even to a congressman who has been in the habit of trotting around after Carlisle and Morrison; certainly it should never be misunderstood by so intelligent a writer as the editor of the Albany News and Advertiser. The democratic party of the south is not a free trade party, nor are its sympathies mainly in that direction. These are facts that ought to commend themselves to the serious attention of our contemporary.

They are facts which, we repeat, the southern congressmen will finally discover for themselves; and, in saying this, we do not, as the News and Advertiser seems to think, threaten the Georgia delegation with defeat. There will be no tariff issue in Georgia; it is an issue that cannot be made with safety, and therefore there will be no test. Even without such a test, the Georgia congressmen will be enabled to find out the attitude of their constituents on this issue, and they will be glad enough to conform their own views to this attitude.

We will say, in conclusion, that our esteemed Albany contemporary is entirely welcome to continue its bright and considerate efforts to torture and twist the language of THE CONSTITUTION to suit the purposes of futile controversy. In time, even the News and Advertiser will discover that the democratic party of Georgia is not a free trade party.

Let Them Try It On.

There are one or two Bacon organs—to be precise the Macon Telegraph and the Rome Courier—that plainly threaten to bolt the party ranks when General Gordon is nominated.

We say very plainly to these papers that they are at liberty to bolt whenever they get ready. There is a large majority of the good democrats who would not regret seeing the Telegraph crowd try on something of this sort. They remember that Cleveland was nominated over their howling protest and elected without their help. They remember that the Telegraph has abused and vilified almost every prominent citizen of Georgia. Its intolerance, its ill temper, its reckless vituperation of better men than those who run it, have put the people in good trim to show it what they think of it, if they can get a square chance at it. It has driven thousands of Bacon men away from Bacon's standard, and General Gordon and his friends will not count its support.

As to the Rome Courier we say to it in perfect frankness that we should not vote for a man of whom we had printed such things as it has printed of General Gordon. But if we felt this way about it, we should not participate in the party nomination. We should do as the Felton men did in the stormy old days in the 7th—stand aloof from the party meetings and hold hands off of the party machinery, and then fight the convention nominee openly and squarely. If we went into the party primary we should feel in honor bound to abide in good faith the result of that party primary, and accept its decision. If every man who goes into a nominating contest reserves the right to oppose the nominee there is no use in having a party.

We trust nothing we have said in the above will prevent the Macon Telegraph and Rome Courier from kicking out of the ranks whenever they get ready, or delay them in getting ready. Of one thing they may be sure. Their threats to bolt will not deter the democracy of Georgia from nominating and electing General Gordon.

The Huntington Slander Dropped.

It is amusing to see the haste with which the organs have dropped the Huntington slander on Gordon.

When it was shown that General Gordon, by favoring Huntington and opposing Tom Scott's scheme, had saved the government $50,000,000, the slander was considered a boomerang, and was incontinently dropped. Here are the facts as no one can deny: Huntington was building a road without a dollar of government aid. Scott was lobbying congress to give him $50,000,000 of endorsed bonds for building a similar road. Huntington protested against the government giving Scott $50,000,000 to do just what he (Huntington) was doing for nothing. General Gordon opposed Scott's scheme, contending that Huntington would, if let alone, finish the road for nothing and thus save the government the $50,000,000 that Scott demanded. The opponents of General Gordon favored Scott's scheme and wanted to vote him $50,000,000 of government credit. The Scott scheme was beaten by General Gordon's help and he was denounced by the lobbyists who favored it.

Gordon was poor when he went into the senate and poorer when he came out of it. He was poor all the time. He was poor as the other southern senators—Lamar, Ransom, Vance, Butler, Hampton, Morgan, Pugh—were poor. His poverty, as theirs, was honorable, because it was indorsed in the midst of blinding and insidious and overwhelming temptations.

In spite of all this he helped to save the government $50,000,000 by beating the scheme of Tom Scott. Having failed to prove that Gordon was corrupt as a senator, his slanderers will now try some other tack. Watch them close!

Bad Either Way.

The scandal involving Mr. Messaros, a Philadelphia preacher, bids fair to become the sensation of the day.

If Mr. Messaros is guilty it is a very bad case; but if he is innocent, there will be little or no cause for rejoicing. There are four witnesses against the preacher, Mrs. Coulston, her husband and two gentlemen. Three are positive in their testimony. One is rather non-committal. Against this array we have the denial of the defendant, and some favorable testimony from a stranger to all parties who happened to be an accidental witness.

The Philadelphians are in doubt, but the feeling is against the Coulston crowd. If Messaros tells the truth the Coulstons had cause to be offended with him for rebuking them and offering unpleasant advice. The father-in-law of Mrs. Coulton gives the lady an unenviable character. He says that she married his son for his money. They lived for awhile in the old man's house, but Mrs. Coulston had a bad temper. She made it warm for the senior Coulston, assaulted and battered him, and had to be turned out by legal process. Then she instigated her husband to swindle his father out of thirty-three houses. Altogether she proved herself a schemer and a dangerous woman.

With these points before them people naturally feel inclined to sympathize with the preacher. They are not convinced of his innocence, but they suspect Mrs. Coulston. Still, it is horrible to contemplate the possibility that is suggested. Have we come to such a pass in this civilized country that church members in a moral community are unscrupulous enough to conspire together, lay a trap for their pastor and perjure themselves in order to accomplish their revenge? This is difficult to believe. If the developments in this case force us to believe it, men will lose confidence in human testimody. It would be a bad thing to unjustly convict Messaros, but his acquittal would make society tremble. Conspiracy and perjury would be dreaded everywhere. It is too ugly a tangle to be satisfactorily straightened out. We can only hope that it will be the last of its kind.

Mr. Randall in New York.

Probably no more entertaining farce was ever enacted than the attempt now being made to read Mr. Samuel J. Randall and his democratic friends out of the party. We may be very sure that the attempt is not a serious one. The Courier-Journal and Mr. Morrison are making a good deal of fuss in that direction, but they are compelled to appease their whisky ring bosses, and the whisky ring bosses can only be appeased by this annual attack on Mr. Randall.

Among others, we observe that Mr. Hewitt, the nervous man, is in favor of giving Mr. Randall the grand bounce—as the phrase goes. But as Mr. Randall took occasion to remind Mr. Hewitt, when New York was in danger, none of the whisky ring or free trade politicians were called on to stump the state for Mr. Cleveland, Mr. Randall was sent for, and wherever he went on the hustings, he announced the tariff doctrine which he has illustrated by his votes in the house. He made no concealments. He talked out in meeting. He told the democrats of New York that the democratic party was not in favor of crippling the industries of that state, and the result was that the state which had given a majority for Garfield, gave a majority for Cleveland. Imagine what the result would have been if the Morrison free traders had been turned loose in New York during the campaign!

Mr. Randall has been consistent. He is not a free trader, and time will show that the democratic party is not a free trade party.

The Death of Hon. David Davis.

In the death of the Hon. David Davis, Illinois loses one of her most distinguished citizens.

Judge Davis first made his appearance in political life in 1844, when he was elected to the Illinois legislature as a Henry Clay whig. He formed a strong friendship for Abraham Lincoln, and in 1860 did more than any other man to secure Lincoln's nomination for the presidency. In 1862 Judge Davis accepted an appointment on the federal supreme court bench, and filled the position with honor and credit until 1876, when the legislature of his state elected him United States Senator.

It was intended that Judge Davis should take the odd place on the electoral commission in 1877, at the time of the Hayes-Tilden trouble, but his election to the senate caused the selection of Judge Bradley. As a senator it will be recollected that during the deadlock over appointments during the early part of Garfield's administration, he was president of the body, and, with Senator Mahone, held the balance of power.

There was a period in Judge Davis's life when his reputation for conservatism and judicial fairness led the country to look upon him as a rising man, but his senatorial term relegated him to the rear.

DAVID DAVIS is dead. He was a man without convictions, but his faults should be buried with him. While judge of the supreme court, he sold out to the Chandlers and was made senator, thus giving the Hayes conspirators a majority of the electoral commission. The country recovered from this sale, but poor David Davis never did.

THE Macon Telegraph's self-acting table will presently find its way to the cupboard.

THE "dark horse" of the Savannah News will now disappear from the arena.

ATLANTA is becoming quite a newspaper center and the leading dailies of the state are establishing headquarters of their own at the capital. The latest arrival is the Augusta Chronicle, which makes the following announcement:

The Chronicle commends its Atlanta department to the people of the capital and the state. Mr. E. B. Hook, our agent and correspondent, will be found affable and capable, and will keep the Chronicle before the public and the public before the Chronicle. He has organized for business and the paper will be found at this office at all times. Our news service will thus be enlarged and our business facilities widened.

THE CONSTITUTION is glad to welcome the Chronicle in Atlanta, and bespeaks for its representative, Mr. E. B. Hook, the advantage of every facility which should be extended the representative of such a journal. Mr. Hook has served several years upon the staff of the Chronicle in Augusta, is an accomplished gentleman and will prove a valuable addition to the ranks of journalism in Atlanta.

THE ink and papers that have been wasted in this campaign by the Macon Telegraph's "Plain Talk" is something terrible to think about.

CONSTITUTIONALS.

Pencil Paragraphs and Editorial Shortstops Caught on the Run.

Next Thursday morning Atlanta will begin her experiment with the prohibition law.

The people on both sides of the question are awaiting with impatient interest to see what a dry city looks like.

What evasions will be attempted and what prosecutions will follow cannot be fully foreshadowed now, but there is every reason to believe that a considerable battle will be in progress a week or so hence. It is understood that detectives have been engaged already, and the law will be enforced to the letter. That is, wherever a man is detected in the violation of the letter of the law he will be prosecuted.

The law squarely prohibits the sale of everything except domestic wines, cider and pure alcohol. The first vexatious question will probably grow out of the interpretation of the word "domestic." The prohibitionists will, it is said, insist that the word domestic is intended to mean wines made in Georgia. The wine section of the bill is as follows:

"The act shall not be so construed as to prevent the manufacture, sale and use or domestic wines or cider or the sale of wines for sacramental purposes, provided such wines or cider shall not be sold in barrooms by retail, nor shall anything therein contained prevent licensed druggists from selling or furnishing pure alcohol for medicinal for medicine, art, scientific or mechanical purposes."

If men sell wines not made in Georgia even under the wine license that is to be issued they will be prosecuted. That will raise the point as to whether or not the state of Georgia can discriminate against wines made in other states. The federal constitution says that citizens of each state shall have all the rights of citizens of the several states. One prominent prohibitionist takes the position that a citizen of Alabama, for instance, will have a right to sell his wine in Georgia, but the Georgian who buys that Alabama wine will not have the right to sell it. In other words the United States protects the Alabamian and his property only so long as they remain together: that the protection does not follow the wine through all the channels of trade after it passes out of the hands of the Alabama owners.

"Do you believe," I asked, "that a Georgia merchant could be forced to pay a tax to sell Alabama corn that he would not have to pay to sell Georgia corn?"

"No, of course not. In fact, well let's see. This is a vexatious question. I'm not so sure about that wine business."

"Does it not all hinge," I asked, "on the intention of the constitution? Does not the constitution intend to prohibit one state from building up its own industries by discriminating against similar industries of another state? Does not the constitution intend that all Americans and all American industries shall stand on the same footing? Is not the effect of the Georgia law to build up the wine interests of Georgia by cutting off all competition with the rest of the world?"

"That is my belief," said an old lawyer.

When Judge McCay passed upon the contested election case in December, he said of this domestic wine clause:

"I do not doubt that there is one of the provisions of the bill that is in violation of the constitution of the United States to wit: that provision which, while it provides for the prohibition of the sale of all intoxicating liquors of every kind, exempts domestic wines. This, it was not competent for the legislature to do. Commerce between the states is by the constitution of the United states under the control of congress, and citizens of each state have all the rights of citizens of other states. A man in California engaged in making wine has under the constitution of the United States just as much right to sell it as a citizen of Georgia has, and it is not competent for the legislature to put burdens upon one that it does not but upon the other. Nor am I at all clear that this distinction in favor of domestic wines does not render null and void the whole bill. It is true there are many cases where an unconstitutional clause has been decided not to effect the other portions of the act if they be independent and are capable of being stricken from the act without effecting the general scope. I do not believe, however, that the test insisted upon by the complainants is the proper one. Their test is that we shall say that the people would or would not have voted for the bill, or the legislature would or would not have passed it without the unconstitutional clause. Is the language so broad as that the provision cannot be pruned away, leaving the tree unhurt, spreading its essential branches over the land it is designed to shade? This act, is essentially an act to prevent the sale of spirituous liquors. A general clause makes it illegal to sell any intoxicating liquors no matter where made. If the people voted that way it would be dry. If they vote dry, dry it is. Not even champagne nor wine grown in Georgia can be sold without the proviso. What would prohibition be worth with a domestic wine shop at every corner? The proviso exempting domestic wines ought never to have been in the bill. It is void if its purpose was ever to be carried out. A man is just as drunk, just as much a brute, just as much a worthless excrescence on society who is drunk on domestic wines as though he got drunk on brandy. It is possible, I think, to separate this obnoxious clause exempting domestic wines. I am not, however, as clear on that as I would like to be."

A question arises. "Will the federal courts allow all American wines to be sold, or will they strike from the bill the provision which excepts 'domestic' wines?"

It is said by some that the supreme court will let in all American wines, as it is the policy of that tribunal to foster trade whenever it is possible to do so. Others hold that the entire exception of wines will be stricken out and that the bill will be left as dry as a powder horn.

An interesting question to be raised is whether or not hotels and restaurants can serve wines and liquors to their guests at table. The prohibitionists hold that such houses will have to take out the wine license and sell by the quart only, and that they cannot serve any of the liquors prohibited by the bill. In other words, that hotels have no more rights than citizens generally are entitled to.

Here is still another point. The federal constitution says:

"No state shall without the consent of the congress lay any imports or duties on imports or exports except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection laws."

As the state has no power to collect duties it has no power to prohibit the importation of foreign wine, and the power to sell is guaranteed to a man who is allowed to bring his foreign goods into this country, but it is held that when the original package is broken or the goods pass into the hands of a second party, the state has the right to come in and regulate the sale.

Good lawyers hold that there is no federal law which prohibits the state from discriminating against foreign wines and preventing their sale altogether after the importer has broken the original packages.

I am told that California wine can be bought at fifty cents a gallon. If so, a quart will come cheap, and a dinner with wine will be in the reach of the humblest citizen.

A man said yesterday:

"I do not expect to see much of the umbrella handle and leather belt business carried on, but I do expect to see a good deal of back room liquor selling. For instance, restaurants and hotels will have private rooms where liquors of all sorts may be bought by men who are known to be 'still-tongued.'"

When Hon. Dennis Hammond was mayor of Atlanta he broke up the Sunday liquor selling by concealing detectives near the bars to take the names of such men as entered and the next morning these back-door drinkers would be summoned into court as witnesses. It is understood that a policy like unto that will be adopted by the prohibitionists who have in charge the enforcement of the law.

Certain restaurants have been known to sell liquors on Sunday by serving it in teacups.

I asked a doctor yesterday if any trouble could be expected from "pure alcohol." He answered:

"You take a little water and sugar and a tablespoonful of alcohol and you have got a drink. A quarter's worth of alcohol will last you a week. It sells for thirty cents [illegible] where [illegible]

I asked the city clerk if he had sold [illegible] licenses. He replied:

"No."

"What is the license worth?"

"A hundred dollars a year. It entitles the holder to sell domestic wines for one year in quantities of not less than one quart."

The prohibitionists say the brewery may make beer but shall not sell it.

Leaving out the wine clause of the prohibition bill the law may be stated concisely by quoting the 6th section of the bill. Here it is, paste it in your hat:

"It shall not be lawful for any person within the limits of such county, to sell or barter for valuable consideration either directly or indirectly, or give away to induce trade at any place of business or furnish at other public places any alcoholic, spirituous, malt or intoxicating liquors or fintoxicating bitters or other drinks which if drank to excess will produce intoxication."

STEEPLE CLIMBING.

How One May Get Accustomed to the Danger—Views of a Workman.

From the New York Tribune.

With bated breath and upturned faces, a large crowd stood the other day watching a man who was slowly ascending the steeple of an uptown church. He seemed to go over the delicate scaffolding like a snail. The crowd below were expecting every moment to see him fall. When he reached the end of the scaffolding and stood upon a piece of framework that looked in the distance as if it was about a foot square, he leaned far over and shouted something to another workman about half way down. The spectators shuddered but could not take their eyes from the little climber who had left the scaffolding and and was still going up the steeple. When he reached the top he remained for a few minutes, examined the steeple on every side, and then retraced his steps. When he got safely back to the scaffold he waved his hand to the people and smiled. He went to the top of the steeple several times in the course of an hour, and every time a crowd gathered.

"You think it hazardous?" said the steeple climber to a Tribune reporter when he came down to the ground. Though he looked so small when in the air he was considerably above the average height, slim and wiry, all bone and muscle, with a clear, steady eye and hand, and perfect confidence in himself. His eyes sparkled as if he was in love with the work, as he continued: "People who are not used to being at great heights, and who feel dizzy when a few feet from the ground, naturally look with wonder upon a man working high up in the air, and think that he must feel as they would. I probably go upon more steeples and other elevated places to adjust ornamental designs than any other man in the business, and I feel just as much at home standing on a narrow board 200 feet from the ground as I would on a rock. I feel a perfect sense of safety and never think of falling.

"But I was not always without fear. When I first began the business I always started up the scaffolding with trembling legs and a quaking heart, and many times I have not gone to the top but returned with some excuse for not going up just then. An old man who had been a climber in his day saw me on one of these occasions when my heart was weak, and gave me a bit of advice that cured my faint-heartedness in time. He said when starting up always to fix your mind intently on the work you are going to do, and keep every thought of fear, or that something is going to happen, out of your mind. This was just the thing, and I have found from experience that it is thinking about fear that makes a man afraid, and over caution has given many a poor fellow a tumble, where boldness and seeming recklessness would have carried him through all right. There are only a few expert climbers. Hundreds quit the business in a short time because they cannot overcome their nervous dread. I have seen stout hearted fellows who would march up to a cannon's mouth without a quiver, when they got to the place where the scaffolding ends, and from which point they would have to 'shin' to the top, try to step up but a ton of lead had been hooked to their foot and it would not go up an inch.

"I have known men who when they got into a ticklish spot would have black specks come before their eyes which would move up and down and in a circle, and they would fall down and hug a plank like a long-lost brother. Their heads would seem to be in a whirl. This is where a man gets 'rattled' and it requires the greatest exercise of the will to overcome this feeling. I have felt this way many times, and even now I sometimes have a sudden desire when on the pinnacle of a steeple to jump off, but I always laugh at the idea and it goes away as quickly as it comes. A man who drinks stimulants is out of place on a steeple, where a false step will send him headlong a hundred feet or more below. So also is a fat man, for a climber must be light, agile and muscular. Dark-haired men with swarthy faces usually make the best climbers."

"Does it prevent dizziness when going to a great height to keep the eyes turned upward?"

"This is a popular notion, but there is nothing in it except that the attention is turned from the idea of falling, and this will keep a man from tumbling. But the place for the eyes is upon the road to be traveled to see that everything is in position. A high wind sometimes renders scaffolding unsafe, and if a man has his eye on the sky he would never see it."

"Did you ever fall?"

"I've had many narrow escapes, but only one good fall. This was about seventy feet. I had a sick child at home, and was thinking about her, and was absent-minded. I started off sideways between the scaffold and steeple, and in two or three seconds I was at the bottom. I thought I would be killed, and in a second my whole life flashed through my mind, and also the future of my family, and how they would all look after the children were full-grown. I knew that I was bumping against the timbers of the scaffold, but there was no pain, and I was overcome apparently by a soothing influence and never had a more pleasant journey in my life. It seemed as if I was falling for hours. I knew when I struck the bottom and felt a shock at the sudden stop, but it was not disagreeable. I had enough pain afterward, though, and it took about six months to patch up my body. Both arms and one leg were broken. I made up my mind to give up the business when I got well, but in a little while the old fascination came back and I went to climbing again."

Young Lawyers Refuse to Swear.

From the Philadelphia Times.

Fifty-two young men, very generally equipped with bulging brows, long tongues, hard cheeks, and the other appurtenances of a first-class lawyer, represented this year's crop of graduates from the university law school in the county courts yesterday. After Judge Arnold had finished reading an opinion about twenty-five of them came before him and Judge Thayer to be admitted to practice as attorneys. Almost all had conscientious scruples against swearing and preferred to affirm. A grim smile played around the mouth of a hoary-headed practitioneer, who was watching the proceedings, as he remarked: "They will get over having conscientious scruples in a few years." "And in the mean time," added another successful lawyer, whose own early professional life had its share of disappointment, "they will do plenty of swearing."

AN IMPC... ...SSES THE HOUSE.

The Report of a Committee of Conference Concurred In, Requiring the Roads to Pay the Amounts They Owe the Government for Surveying and Conveying Lands.

WASHINGTON, June 26.—[Special.]—A most important bill was finally passed this morning by a concurrence by the house in the report of a committee of conference. During the last session the house committee on Pacific railroads matured and passed a bill requiring the Union Pacific and California Pacific roads to pay the amounts they owe the government for the surveying, selecting and conveying lands donated to those roads, amounting to nearly one million dollars. That bill was reported by Mr. Crisp, of Georgia, and supported in strong and elaborate speeches by him, Governor Throckmarton and others of that committee, but after passing the house was not acted upon by the senate. At an early day of the present session the committee on Pacific railroads again considered the subject, which was again reported by Mr. Crisp, and again passed the house and went to the senate. The committee also reported another bill, through Mr. Richardson, of Tennessee, which was ably and elaborately supported by him in a speech to the house, making like requirements of the Northern Pacific railroad company. The senate amended the first house bill by including in it the Northern Pacific road. The two bills thus consolidated provided for the collection of over a million and a half of dollars. These several land grant railroads of the government for the surveying already done in which under the original laws should have been paid from time to time as the work was done, and will also include more than a half million dollars for future work. But the most important results from the legislation is in the requirement that those land grant railroads and their assignees shall pay taxes on those lands to the state and territories where they exist, whenever the government authorities notify the said companies that the patents are ready. Heretofore these lands have paid comparatively no taxes to the states or territories because of the refusal of the companies and the purchasers under them, who buy the lands on long time to take out patents. These lands being in large bodies in many localities and paying no taxes have been a great and growing burden upon the counties, states and territories where they are situated. Mr. Crisp, of Georgia, this morning made a strong presentation of the bill and report of the conference committee, after which the house agreed to the report and passed the bill. The members of the committee on the Pacific railroads congratulate themselves upon the success of this measure.

THE HOUSE.

Proceedings of the Day—The Pacific Railroads—Other Business.

WASHINGTON, June 26.—In the house, Mr. Barksdale submitted a conference report on the bill granting leaves of absences to employes of the government printing office, and it was agreed to.

Mr. Crisp submitted a conference report on the bill requiring land grant railaoads to pay the cost of selecting, conveying and surveying their lands—as the bill originally passed the house it applied only to the Union Pacific system, but as amended by the senate and agreed to by the conference committee, its provisions are extended to all land grant roads.

The report was adopted.

The house then went into committee of the whole, (Mr. Reagan in the chair,) on the sundry civil appropriation bill.

On motion of Mr. Randall, of Pennsylvania, an amendment was adopted increasing the force of employes in the bureau of engraving and printing, and increasing the appropriation therefor, this being made necessary by a provision placed in the bill for $1 and $2 greenbacks and for small silver certificates.

The amendment offered yesterday by Mr. Ermentrout of Pennsylvania, for the recoinage of trade dollars into standard silver dollars, was ruled out on a point of order.

Mr. Viele, of New York, offered an amendment appropriating $10,000 for salaries and expenses of the national board of health. Rejected.

In the discussion of the paragraph making an appropriation for the completion of the pension office building that structure came in for a good deal of hostile criticism, Mr. Dunham, of Illinois, remarking, that it was an architectural monstrosity. Mr. Rogers, of Arkansaw, characterising it as a cross between a horse-car stable and a union depot; and Mr. Springer, of Illinois, declaring it was offensive to the view, and suggesting that some of the present ornamentation should be blown up with dynamite.

Mr. Miller, of Tennessee, also spoke in high terms of the commodiousness of the building, and maintained that for its cost it was very satisfactory.

The committee having completed the consideration of half of the bill, rose, and the house, at 6 o'clock, adjourned.

Weekly Bank Statement.

NEW YORK, June 26.—The following is the condition of the banks at the close of business today:

Reserve, decrease	$ 1,357,150
Loans, increase	3,672,600
Specie decrease	1,568,100
Legal tenders, increase	1,240,300
Deposits, increase	4,119,400
Circulation, decrease	23,000

The banks now hold $14,354,275 in excess of the 25 per cent rule.

Close Bidding.

There were only two bids in for the Young Men's Christian association building complete, and there was less than two hundred dollars difference in the bids. The bid of Mr. E. F. Faciolle, the successful man, was eighty-six thousand, seven hundred and forty-five dollars ($86,745).

Mr. Faciolle is fortunate in having such a man as Mr. Shepard to manage his business. Just at the time this work was to be bid on, Mr. F. was taken sick, and has been confined to his bed for the past ten days, but Mr. Shepard has worked hard day and night for the job, and it gives the entire work to Atlanta men, who will use Atlanta material as far as possible. The stone used will be North Carolina brown stone, and the building will be a handsome structure. The other bid mentioned was from Chicago.

...MISSISSIPPI CONJURER.

BRINKLEY, Ark., June 18.—"You'll breed the chills! Come along with me!"

The remark needed no peremptory tone to enforce obedience. To one who has seen a real live, genuine Arkansas chill in operation the suggestion alone is sufficient. So down came a pair of feet from their elevated place above the head of the owner, the pipe was pocketed, and the morning sun bath on the piazza was abandoned. Pleasant as they are, sun baths in this state breed chills, and once bred heaven guard the possessor! Much might be said of them. They stand without a rival; long ago they reached the acme of chilliness. The bottom lands of other sections may do their best, may toil and strive, and rack their victims as they will, but when it comes right down to shaking marrow out of bones, loosening teeth and nail, and then calmly introducing a fever beside which the interior of a coke oven seems Siberia—why, then, Arkansas chills have a walk-over for the Derby. No sun baths here.

"Let us go and see the snake charmer," said the native. "Arkansas produces the snakes, Mississippi the negro."

No need to question the first statement. If there is any specia of snake not common in Arkansas he is yet to be heard from. They are everywhere, of all kinds and sizes, of all degrees of venom. In the bayous they may be seen anywhere by hundreds and thousands. On the prairies they lurk under every shrub and bush. In the forests they are numberless. Not a mile from here, in a little pony bayou, may be seen enough snakes any day to stock all the museums of the country, with a few car loads over for export. It's not considered much of a place for snakes, either, but a fairly good fishing ground, where catfish reach a five-pound notch, and game fish are occasionally taken. When the long-legged native, however, spoke of a colored snake charmer, this was something worth looking into.

Not having any acquaintances with the blacks of Mississippi, I could not question his word, but that any negro would handle a snake seemed incredible. Arkansas blacks will kill them—if their poles are long enough. But touch one—never. To produce a dramatic effect in a crowd of blacks, young or old, male or female, introduce ever so small a snake unexpectedly. There will be one wild whoop, eyes will bulge out in terror, jaws will fall like a trap door, there will be a vision of vanishing male legs and more than female ankles—then the experimenter is sadly alone.

All this as we stroll up to investigate the "Mississippi charmer." The wonder proved a reality. He was leaning against the lee of a drug store, surrounded by a circle of the curious, both black and white. He was nearly full-blooded, tall and angular. His jeans were worn and decidedly dirty. On his head was a torn and much faded felt hat, relic of the storms and sunshine of many seasons. His movements were awkward, and altogether he would be thought the last individual on earth to rival the rabulous snake-charmers of the east. Yet, standing there in the sunshine, he gave such an exhibition as sent cold chills to the heart of all the spectators. To a white man not having an inborn horror of snakes—if there be such an one—his final act was sufficient to make the flesh creep. Evidently he was no Arkansas native. Those about who were preserved a respectful distance.

Stooping over a small box on the ground at his side, the disreputable-looking charmer raised the lid and exposed his collection. There were three black snakes of the species found in Pennsylvania, each some three feet in length; one king snake, a mottled green serpent, nearly as large, and a snake, known here as the water-rattlesnake, of dark brown color and perhaps eighteen inches in length. This snake is said by the blacks to be very poisonous. However that may be, it was enough for all purposes. When the lid was raised there were exposed no stupid, half-awake, inert serpents. Five heads shot into view, five forked tongues darted out, and there was a falling back of the crowd. Slowly one of the black snakes raised himself out of the box and glided gracefully away on the ground.

"Heah yo'!" spoke the charmer. "War you goin'? Yo' done git back yer to dis chile."

"At this word the snake stopped, wheeled around, approached his captor and coiled up his leg and about his body. The other snakes, excepting the smallest, came out of the box at the word and followed the first. All over his body they went, their eyes flashing, their tongues darting back and forth continuously. They twined about his neck, rested on his shoulders, hung about his arms, and but for erect heads and constantly playing tongues seemed perfectly at home. One by one they would be put on the ground and start away, only to stop at the word. Hung over the box they would maintain one position until told to move. They seemed under perfect control, and for nearly half an hour entertained and horrified the rapidly growing circle of spectators. Then the Mississippian put away the big fellows and took out the water rattlesnake. It was his final act. There were no words of introduction, no mumbling invocations or notices that at the conclusion of the entertainment the hat would be passed. He talked to the snakes as he might to children, petting and abusing.

The new snake was a decidedly lively one, a foot and a half long, as said, and of good thickness. It was as wide awake as any of its predecessors, more vicious in appearance, if anything. It did all that they did, then coiled on the fellow's shoulder. He took it in his hands and—great scott! deliberately crowded it into his mouth. It was a capacious mouth. By the side of it even Billy Kersand's pride would be thrown into shadow. The lips closed, and the ungainly black apparently masticated the serpent, while the crowd stood awed by disgust and horror. Slowly his lips opened as when one slowly exhales the smoke of an extra choice cigar. Quick as a flash the snake's head shot out, its tongue a darting flame, its eyes gleaming wickedly. It gradually pushed its body into sight, slipped down on the black's shoulder, and coiled as if to strike; then, at the word, returned to the box. The effect of such an unnatural exhibition was startling in the extreme—revolting beyond description.

"I solemnly swear," said an Indiana gentleman, as he turned away, "if I had a gun I'd shoot that negro in a second."

"It takes a Mississippi negro to do the like of that," calmly observed the native as he shied a dime into the battered hat now in active circulation.

"Fo' God," exclaimed the charmer when a question was raised as to the venomous character of the last snake, "Yo' go fetch yo' dawg, yo'uns. I let um bite, an' ef dat yer dawg be'nt plumb stun ded in a hour, I gives yo' dis yer box o' sarpents, I does."

As to the secret of training the snakes—and well-trained they were—the Mississippian was obstinately dumb. And no dog being brought he went his way. As to the man I have hopes as to the future. If dime museums continue to educate the public in the way of freaks and monstrosities, he may yet blossom out in a spike-tail coat. But the water rattlesnake will continue to have the sympathy of some for being compelled to keep such company.

Bacon Tricks in Houston County.

FORT VALLEY, June 26.—Editors Constitution: The anti-Gordon men are exceedingly active in getting up devices, or tricks, to defeat Gordon of Houston county.

Trick 1st was circulating a paper against Gordon and Bacon both, with a view of electing delegates in favor of a new man, hoping thereby to cheat Gordon out of old Houston.

Trick No. 2 is to commit voters in favor of Judge Simmons, who is not a candidate for governor.

They know that Simmons is very popular in Houston, and by this means many unthinking ones may be deprived of their choice. Look out! Look out! ye Gordon democracy. The air is full of tricks! Yours, &c., FORT VALLEY.

Killed by a Train.

LAFAYETTE, IND., June 26.—Alex. Miller, an old and prominent farmer, driving to the city with his wife on a load of corn, was struck by the Louisville, New Albany and Chicago northbound passenger train at nine o'clock this morning. Both were instantly killed. Their bodies were thrown high in the air, and the body of Mrs. Miller was carried a third of a mile. The train was running fifty miles an hour.

WASHINGTON GOSSIP.

MEN AND THINGS AT THE NATIONAL CAPITAL.

The Proposed Income Tax Bill—Mr. Randall's Reply to General Bragg—Olin Wellborn's Race—Ex-Members Accused Abusing Their Privileges—A Popular Official.

WASHINGTON, June 26.—[Special.]—The proposed income tax is regarded with great favor by the democrats of the house, if their recent demonstrations mean anything. While the Morrison resolution to change the rules so as to require a stipulation on every pension bill of the fund to be so appropriated was being discussed in the house, almost every democratic speaker favored an income tax as the proper means of raising revenue for pensions. The point was admirably put by Mr. Matson, of Indiana, who said that the war made many of the great fortunes of the country, and that the men who bought government bonds with currency worth fifty cents on the dollar ought to pay their share of the pensions to the men who fought the war to a successful conclusion and thereby made the bondholders rich.

Many of the leading democrats of the house are in favor of committing the party to an income tax. They not only want legislation on the subject in congress but also a plank of this kind in the next national platform. All the republican speakers in the recent pension discussion dodged this issue. Income tax bills have often been introduced in congress, but none of them has received much consideration. Mr. Harris, of Georgia, some weeks ago introduced a bill laying a graduated tax on all incomes which, it is estimated, would bring a revenue of from $75,000,000 to $100,000,000 a year. No report has yet been made on this bill. In the coming campaign many democratic candidates for congress will bring the income tax question into the discussion and if it strikes a responsive popular chord united action by the party in favor of such tax may be expected at the next session.

A LITTLE MAN

sometimes makes a big row. The most exciting scene of the present session was occasioned by a little fling from little General Bragg, of Wisconsin, a few afternoons ago. General Bragg is a fiery, dyspeptic gentleman who has the unfortunate habit of saying mean things. He seldom speaks without irritating and offending somebody. On this occasion he fired into the ranks of his own party. While the democrats were making a united fight on the Morrison resolution to change the rules General Bragg went out of the legitimate line of discussion to insult Mr. Randall and the thirty four democrats who voted with him against the consideration of the tariff bill. Mr. Randall was evidently very indignant at this unprovoked attack, and as General Bragg sat down he rose white with suppressed passion. His admirable self control was never better displayed. Most men under such provocation would have given way to passion and uttered words which would soon have been regretted. Everybody could see how angry Mr. Randall was. Everybody knows how pugnacious he is and some of his friends feared that he might make an injudicious reply. He relieved all such apprehensions in a few moments. In his opening sentence he proclaimed himself the peer of any man on the floor in honesty of opinion and in the courage of his convictions. Then, dismissing with contempt all insinuations as to his motives in the recent tariff contest he asserted, and challenged a discussion of the assertion that he stood by the democratic platform closer than did the champions of this bill. Mr. Randall owes General Bragg his thanks for arousing him, for I never heard him speak so forcibly as he did in that impassioned defiance of his critics in his own party. He turned on Mr. Hewitt, who sat a few feet from him, and sharply rebuking him for his recent speech in Philadelphia urging the democrats to leave Mr. Randall at home, invited the New York reformer to meet him face to face on this issue before his constituents. Mr. Randall's speech was a manly, dignified explanation of his attitude, and it commands the respect of every man on both sides of the house.

CONGRESSMAN OLIN WELLBORN, of Texas, is having a hard race for re-nomination. His principal opponent is Lieut. Governor Gibbs, who lives in the same county. Mr. Gibbs recently spent two weeks in Washington, and liked it so well that he wants to come here as a congressman. Mr. Wellborn is now serving his fifth term. Few men stand higher in the house. He has been a faithful, attentive and capable member, and has won the confidence and esteem of his associates. Two years ago he had a contest very similar to the present one, and his friends are confident that the result now will be what it was then. If the district is always as well represented as it has been by Mr. Wellborn, it will be fortunate.

EX-MEMBERS PRIVILEGES.

The pending investigation of alleged violations of the privileges of the floor of the house by ex-members, strikes at an abuse which has long existed in congress. Almost any day half a dozen or more ex-members may be seen conering members at their desks and in the cloak rooms in a manner which clearly means business. The lobby is largely composed of these gentlemen whose access to the floor gives them a decided advantage over the lobbyist who has never been a member. The ex-member is obligated not to lobby on the floor by the conditions of his admission but the bold and open violation of this rule has been going on for years. The three hundred and twenty-five members and seven delegates fill the hall quite comfortably, and it might be a good idea to exclude ex-members altogether. As long as they are allowed to go on the floor some of them will go there to lobby.

A GEORGIA OFFICIAL.

I have often noticed this session the excellent management of the house document room. It is one of the most difficult parts of the congressional machinery to keep in order, and it has never been more satisfactorily conducted than at present. Mr. A. W. Gibson, of Macon, was put at the head of this department last December, on the recommendation of Congressman Blount. Mr. Gibson is a model official. By his systematic business methods and his uniform courtesy he has made many friends, not only among the members of congress but among the public generally. The house has not a more efficient or a more popular officer.

PURE FOOD ASSURED.

For raising bread, biscuit or other food, only the very best and purest baking powder should be employed. The use of the ordinary cream of tartar, or of a baking powder containing lime, alum or phosphates, carries deleterious ingredients into the food to the prejudice of the life and health of the consumer.

The ordinary baking powder contains either lime, which introduced into the system in too free quantities causes serious disorders of the kidneys; alum, a corrosive poison, or phosphates, which are condemned by physicians as deleterious in their effect when taken under certain physical conditions.

The absolute purity of the Royal Baking Powder makes it preeminently the most useful and wholesome leavening agent known. It contains no lime, alum, phosphate or other impurity, leaves no alkaline or other residuum in the food, and its use always ensures pure, light and sweet bread, biscuit and cake, that is perfectly digestible and wholesome whether hot or cold, fresh or stale. Its leavening power has been determined the highest whenever tested by official authority, and all chemists and writers on food hygiene commend it for its sterling qualities.

HON. DAVID MAYER.

Remarks of the Vice-President of the Board of Education, Friday Night.

Hon. David Mayer's remarks Friday night at DeGives on the occasion of the High school commencement were well timed and received much applause. Mr. Mayer began by telling the young ladies of the graduating class that they had not finished their education, that they had much still to learn. He advised them to listen to the teachings of their mothers and to beware of putting confidence in strangers, and especially did he caution them that it was not necessary to get acquainted with a young man merely because he sported a mustache and parted his hair in the middle. After his address to the graduates, Mr. Mayer turned to the audience and delivered the following address, which is printed at the request of many friends of the schools:

Ladies and Gentlemen—Fellow Citizens: Each and every one of you have an interest in the public schools of Atlanta. It is the school of every man, woman and child in Atlanta, it is the institution of its people. It is the common property of the rich and of the poor, the proud and the humble, and its fountain of wholesome instructions flows free for all. If Providence has poured its riches into your lap, knowledge is the most precious inheritance here provided for your children; has poverty or misfortune doomed your efforts, here knowledge is offered to equip your children for the battle of life.

PRESENTATIONS OF GRADUATES.

Boy Graduates, 210—Girls, 312—522.

Do not send your daughters abroad, the facilities for a sound practical education offered at your door are ample, added to this the influence of home: the love of a mother, the care of the father and I ask you what fashionable boarding school, or college offers superior advantages. The lovely, innocent girl might return to you from the high-toned and high-prized "Young Ladies Institute," (there is no such thing, as girls in such concerns), with some fancy bow and the most artificial smiles which may please the empty headed dudes, but give me and preserve the sweet smile of nature, the sincere Georgia shake of the hand; look at the girls we usher today through the portals of your own school into the world, and in all candor answer me, are you not proud of them?

III. Beware of politicians and sectarians.

The public schools of Atlanta as I have said are the public property of all, they know not and should not know any distinctions and it is well we should guard with vigilance against the innovations. Politicians and sectarians might endeavor to engraft upon this truly democratic institution. If you would promote the true interest of our schools, keep them forever free from the influence of two elements, namely: politics and sectarianism and any and all other isms, that all may meet in its halls of wisdom without hindrance.

IV. Charity and humanity.

In the absence of Governor Brown, I, as vice-president of the board of education, will say a few words in justice to him: Last year in his remarks on a like occasion as president of the board, he ascribed to Christianity alone the civilization and the elevation of woman, with the advice to the graduates, amongst which were two Jewish girls, to pay homage to and ever suffer for Christianity.

Our worthy president would not willingly wound the feelings of his Jewish friends, he would not open the wounds and sufferings of long centuries. Statesman and patriot that he is, he has ever had the best interest of the schools at heart, he has ever fostered the most liberal views, and has guarded with jealous care against all encroachments upon its public character.

Our schools are not a religious institution: it belongs to no denomination, but as a Jew, I take the liberty to advise you, my dear girls—you who belong to the Christian church, to read diligently and study at home, at church, in the Sabbath school, the grand and ennobling doctrines of Christ, and, above all, practice them, and by doing so you will lead a useful, virtuous life, no matter what your denomination. All of you follow the teachings of your religion and you will be ornaments to society.

Grant me the privilege to say a few words to you my Chrisaian friends, and particularly to the ministers of the gospel, you that can do so much good in this world, follow the examples of Christ, preach good will between all the children of our heavenly Father, and do not condemn those who differ with you.

How often have I seen in the papers harsh remarks coming from the pulpit; how often have I listened to abuse heaped upon different denominations, though of the same faith, and when it comes to my own race they frequently would not allow a single Jew to go to heaven, as though they were the only agents on earth who could furnish the tickets. It seems inconsistent to insult the family and yet claim salvation through the race.

But I have one consolation, the Jews are considered smart, and if they cannot get into heaven straight, maybe they will occasionally squeeze in. We Jews believe in the old Psalms and Jonas (the whale too), and we need no new ones.

But, ladies and gentlemen, pardon me, I speak from the heart. Let us stand together on the broad platform of humanity and charity and together persevere in the good work to raise our children to become good and useful men and women. Let us so educate them that the next generation will rise up and call us blessed; let us so teach them that when the summons comes that calls us before our Heavenly Father, we may close our eyes with the consoling thought: Our children are safe, let us so raise them that should it please Providence to call them before our earthly pilgrimage is ended, we may look with well founded hope for a reunion in our Father's house not made by hands, but eternal and everlasting.

MEANS'S HIGH SCHOOL.

The Closing Exercises at DeGive's Opera House Last Monday Evening.

The closing exercises of Means's High school took place at DeGive's opera house Monday evening, beginning precisely at eight o'clock. The spelling bee came first and proved very interesting. Mr. Julius DeGive and Master John A. Speer held the fort on their respective sides for a while, but eventually Mr. DeGive slipped and John A. Speer stood champion speller. The inspection of guns, next in order, was very interesting, and the boys deserve credit for having such brilliant pieces, which added much to the appearance of the company.

On inspection, O. N. Rauschenberg received the highest mark. Then came a drill which exhibited a very high degree of perfection in military tactics. The prize for best drilled cadet was given to Mr. William Edwards. For elocution in class "A," Master James N. Boyd received the Lumpkin medal; in class "B" J. H. Hallman received the medal, which makes two now in his possession, having taken one in the lower class last year. The medal for punctuality was awarded after much deliberation to Mr. W. F. Hollingsworth. This medal was to be awarded for punctuality, provided there was no tie. But should two or more be equally prompt, it was to be decided by grades in department, and if necessary scholarship was to be considered to untie the knot. On examining the record, it was ascertained that W. F. Hollingsworth, S. T. Barnett, T. K. Glenn, George W. Parrott, J. P. Langston, Harry Perkerson, John H. Hallman and Tom Hinman, were not marked absent or tardy during the year. Mr. Hinman, from a misunderstanding on his part about a picnic in May, had one absence, but it was decided that equity was in his case, and was therefore enrolled as one of the punctual boys.

The examination papers are remarkably neat and show very careful training in penmanship. The medal in this department was captured by Master W. L. May.

The teachers of this school have the confidence of the people and are undoubtedly doing much good in the city.

How to Make a Living.

The question of placing in the hands of their sons and daughters the means of earning an honorable living is the uppermost thought in parents' minds. A course of business training at Goldsmith's School of Business, 38½ South Broad street, has given many a young man and lady a start in life, and has often aided those who hold small paying positions to rise to places of profit. Business men indorse it, and the principals guarantee that students are trained in much less time, and more thoroughly than at any other similar school. Night school also. For circulars, address Goldsmith & Sullivan, principals.

John Keely, "The Leader of Low Prices," "Back from New York" again. Such is the information which this princely merchant affords us today. Well, surely his efforts in business are such as to justify the expectation of a large patronage, for his energy never tires. Now, whilst the public are clamoring for "bargains," John Keely rushes off to New York, and behold! his sidewalks are soon deluged with goods. Some four hundred cases just having been opened, and his store is rendered doubly bright with new and attractive "bargains." John Keely says he never expected so large a trade as during the coming days, from the fact that he never was so well prepared for it. His stock was never so large or so attractive, and he says the prices will astonish the people. May he have that patronage so richly deserved by one who is always on the alert to lay before the people bargains. We predict for the captain a crowded store for the balance of this season. He is well "fixed" to entertain crowds.

Found Him.

The Detroit Free Press says it has fonnd the meanest man on the globe. He is the man who won't pay for sprinkling the street in front of his door, and thus makes himself an annoyance and a nuisance to his neighbors.

PERSONAL.

MAUCK has cut prices of wall paper.

HON H. C. DAY, of Brunswick, is at the Kimball.

MR. J. T. JOHNSTON, of Macon, is visiting Atlanta.

Mr. Jessie W. Davis, of Gainesville, was in the city yesterday.

W. B. SMITH and J. M. Findly, of Gainesville, are in the city.

MISS LIZZIE L. JAMES has gone to Talbotton, Ga., to visit friends.

Mr. James J. McCutchen leaves today for a two week's visit to Cumberland.

DR. ARCH AVARY, of this city, took in Oxford commencement last week.

JOE EDDLEMAN has gone into the shoe business with R. C. Black at 3? Whitehall street.

MISS WILLA EDWARDS, of Opelika, Ala., is visiting Miss Etta S?al, at 230 Whitehall street.

MRS. M. M. MAUCK has gone to Virginia to spend the summer for the benefit of her health.

MR. W. L. SHERRILL and wife, of Macon, were in Atlanta yesterday on their way to Gainesville.

MAY'S mikado mantels are taking the day. Mr. May has fitted up an exhibition room for the ladies.

JUDGE T. J. SIMMONS, the dark horse for governor of Georgia, is summering at New Holland.

MISS ANNIE SMITH is still very low with typhoid fever and there is little hopes for her recovery.

JOHN H. JAMES has gone to Macon to attend the Mercer commencement, He is one of the trustees.

MR. SAMUEL W. GOODE has returned to the city from a business trip to Alabama and southwest Georgia.

MRS. L. P. THOMAS, JR., left for Newnan yesterday afternoon, after a pleasant visit to relatives in this city.

THE music of Wurm's orchestra is something wonderful, Go out this afternoon and hear the sacred concert.

THE afternoons are cool and pleasant at Ponce de Leon. Go out this afternoon and hear the sacred concert.

FOR a pleasant evening go to Ponce de Leon. Wurm's orchestra will give a sacred concert, and all can have a splendid time.

MRS. FANNIE J. WINN, who has been on a visit for several weeks at her father's, has returned to her home in Lawrenceville.

MISS MINNIE MOOTZ, a beautiful and highly accomplished young lady of Columbus, Ga., is visiting Miss Mattie Jones, 12 Wheat street.

MRS. W. W. BRUN and son, who have been visiting Mr. A. C. Johnson, have gone to Alabama, which they will make their future home.

JUST arrived, a few West India Island young parrots and for sale at Reading Room, No. 22 Mariette street, Atlanta, at eight dollars each.

MISS CLARA THOMAS and Miss Ina Kirby left yesterday afternoon for Lawrenceville, report says as attendants on a marriage ceremony.

MISS MARIE HOLLIDAY, a charming young lady of Atlanta, is on a visit to friends and relatives in Macon. She is the guest of her cousin, Mr. Philip Fitzgerald.

MISS ALEY HUGHEY, a popular young lady of this city, is at home again after an extended visit to friends and relatives at Jacksonville and other points in Florida.

THE young man who captured the medal for elocution in Means's high school was Master J. W. Boyd. Master Boyd is a bright young man and has extraordinary talent as a declaimer.

MR. H. H. SMITH, of Rome, whose little boy, Cuyler, has been quite sick at the Kimball house, will return to his home this morning. Mrs. Smith and Cuyler will remain in Atlanta several weeks longer.

MISS LULA MCCORD, one of Jacksonville's most charming young ladies, left yesterday for Jonesboro, where she has gone to attend the commencement exercises and to visit relatives in and around that city.

MR. RUSSELL HILL, of Philadelphia, Pa., is again in our city. Mr. Hill reports the wheat crops all through Virginia as being unprecedented. Owing to incessant rains the farmers are all behind in their harvesting.

GRANT HOUSE ARRIVALS: J S Westbrook, Griffin, Ga; Rev T W Truscott, Sierra Leone West Africa; Wm Wisbart, Rome, Ga; W S Wise, Indianapolis, Ind; Wm S Speer, Nashville, Tenn; M F Brooks, Birmingham, Ala; Fred Winche, Ga; A P Blue and family, Cumberland Island,

DR. WM. P. NICOLSON has been appointed surgeon of the Atlanta Division of the Richmond and Danville railroad. Dr. Nicolson has for several years been surgeon of the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia railroad, and the Richmond and Danville railroad is fortunate in securing the services of so distinguished and successful a physician.

THE first honor in the sixth grade at Ivy street was taken by Miss Mary B. Bridge. Her general yearly average was 99 3. Miss Bridge is one of the brightest children in the city. Since she has been in school she has taken the highest honor in every grade she has been in. This is quite a high stand for one so young to take, and the young lady deserves great credit.

A CORRESPONDENT of an outside paper, says that in the exercises at Emory college last week, J. E. Warren deserved special mention, and puts him down as a Griffin boy. This is a mistake. Jimmie is an Atlanta boy, one of the most graceful speakers in the state, and his friends have no doubt his audience would have given him the medal if they had been the judges.

MR. HENRY HART and wife leave the city tomorrow to spend the summer in western New York. Mr. Hart will take charge of the business of N. V. Tibbals & Son, N. Y., book publishers at the National Sunday School assembly, Chautauque, N. Y. Mr. Hart also supplies the members of the Chautauqua Literary and Scientific circle with elegant gold badges. He expects to be a busy man for the next two months, but not too busy to welcome the many Atlanta visitors who will be at Chautauqua this season.

AT THE KIMBALL: W. S. Kahn, C Liddeman, N Y; A LaSalle, Paus, Ky; Meak| Laney Memphis; J S Goldsmith, Baltimore; R. B. Maguire. THE CONSTITUTION.

THROUGH THE CITY.

Pencil Paragraphs Caught on the Fly by the Constitution Reporters.

THE YOUNGEST BOY.—Arthur Forsyth, the youngest boy in the first grade of Marietta street school, received the Peabody medal for best in mathematics.

Y. M. C. A. PICNIC.—The Young Men's Christian association picnic at Ponce de Leon yesterday was a very pleasant affair. Quite a large number enjoyed the occasion.

O'CONNOR'S BUSTLE.—Mr. P. A. O'Connor, the patentee of O'Connor's extension bustle, left yesterday afternoon for New York to perfect arrangements for its manufacture.

TALLULAH.—Ladies of St. Paul's M. E. church give their annual excursion to Tallulah falls on next Wednesday. A good time is promised to all who may accompany them.

THE RED MEN.—Comanche Tribe held an election for officers Thursday night, resulting as follows: W. F. Schmitz, sachem; G. T. Long, senion sagamore; D. P. Nolan, junior sagamore; W. J. Williams, chief of records; W. M. Gardner, keeper of wampum.

MUSIC.—The sacred concert at Ponce de Leon should be well attended this afternoon. Go out early and hear it. Ponce de Leon was never so attractive in appearance as now, and with the concert that will be therethis afternoon it is made doubly attractive.

AN OLD CITIZEN'S DEATH.—At his residence in DeKalb county, on June 25th, Mr. Nathaniel Carroll, an old and respected citizen died, in the 80th year of his age. The funeral will take place from Clifton church, three miles from the city, Rev. Dr. Frazier officiating.

PONCE DE LEON.—Why not spend Sunday as it should be spent? Take rest and be ready for the struggle of next week. The best place to find this rest is at Ponce de Leon. There you have all that your heart can desire. The breeze is simply grand; and then this afternoon, Wurm's orchestra will give another sacred concert. There will be twelve pieces, and the music will be the finest ever heard in the south. Don't fail to go.

RAILROAD TAXES.—A conference was held yesterday morning by Comptroller General W. A. Wright, Attorney General Clifford Anderson, and Judge Lyon, of Macon, regarding the taxes due the state by the Arlington extension and the Cuthbert and Eufaula branches of the Southwestern railroad. The amount due is $43,530. It was agreed that the taxes should be paid on the first of July. This ends the railroad litigation to which the state has been a party.

BISHOP TURNER TODAY.—Bishop Turner has consented to preach a special sermon to the Star of the South lodge No. 1456, G. U. O. of O. F., Sunday, June 27th, in the basement of the new courthouse, at three o'clock, to which all sister lodges and all societies are cordially invited. The different societies will form in front of the courthouse at 2:30 o'clock. This being the last "wet" Sunday, a large crowd is expected. There will also be a collection taken up for the benefit of the orphan children of the lodge. Professor Holman will favor the audience with some of his songs.

LAWN PARTY.—The lawn party given by the P. Q. of A. K. and L., last Thursday night at the residence of Mr. J. W. Cooper was quite a success. The warm welcome extended to the friends by Mr. and Mrs. Cooper and Miss Nina was appreciated very much. In the presence of such a cordial welcome the most timid become disarmed of their bashfulnes and thus enjoy such an occasion more than they would under more restrained circumstances. The decorations of the lawn and the refreshments reflected much credit upon the committee, which consisted of J. F. Arringdale, C. H. Cooper, Harry Morgan, G. W. Johnson and H. W. Williams.

HYMENEAL.—The Cartersville American has this item: "Tuesday evening, June 8th, Miss Lula P. Jones, of our city, was married to Mr. C. R. Bilbro, of Atlanta. Miss Lula is a daughter of Colonel R. H. Jones, president of the R. H. Jones & Son manufacturing company. She is an accomplished young lady—a graduate of the LaGrange Female college. She will be especially missed in musical circles, being very highly cultured in music. Mr. Bilbro stands very high in Atlanta, socially, and is one of the first business young men of that city, being a member of the wholesale hardware firm of Morrison, Bain & Co. They left for Atlanta, their future home, on Saturday, the 12th instant. We wish for them a long life of happiness."

A CORRECTION.—The building now occupied by John Domini, 17 and 19 Whitehall street, has been leased by Messrs. Eiseman Bros. for a term of five years, and they will remove to it about the first of September. They will put in one of the largest and best stocks of clothing and gents furnishing goods in the city. In connection with the above we were made to say a few days ago that the Capitol City Land Improvement company had leased this building and would go into the clothing business. This error arose from the fact that the building was leased by Messrs. Eiseman Bros. from the Capitol City Land Improvement company. Messrs. Eiseman Bros. will have the building rebuilt, having a handsome front put to it. When finished it will be one of the best business stands in the city

REGISTRATION AND ELECTIONS.—The registration of qualified voters in Fulton county closed at 7 o'clock last night. The results at the country precincts were not received in the city in time to be used in this report. In north Atlanta the total number registered was 1,140, and in south Atlanta 1,408, making a total for the city of 2,548. The white voters out numbered the blacks four to one. The elections in which registered voters will be allowed to take part are "fence or no fence," legislative, gubernatorial and congressional. The "fence or no fence" election will take place on the 6th of July. All the districts in the county except two already have the fence law in force. The election will not affect any but the two "fence" districts. If the election should be for "fence," the districts which have agreed by ballot that they will have "no fence" will not be compelled to rebuild their fences.

A SEMI-ANNUAL REUNION.—The semi-annual reunion of the Woman's Christian association, which is to be held in the First Baptist church tomorrow (Monday) night at eight o'clock, will doubtless be a season of rare interest and enjoyment. This association, which is just six months old, has accomplished much good among the destitute women and girls of our city, and indeed its benefactions are shared by those of other cities and states. The exercises of the reunion tomorrow night will be devotional, with a full but condensed report of the work of the association since the opening of their home on Marietta street, on the 28th of December, 1885. Short addresses will be made by Drs. Hawthorne, Lee and other pastors and friends of the institution. Dr. Barnett, of the First Presbyterian church will preside over the meeting. Some of the inmates of the home will be present, among them some of the children of the nursery and orphanage department, commonly known as the "babies of the home." An interesting feature will be a song by a little blind girl in this department. At the close of these exercises, the ladies will serve refreshments of ice cream, sherbet and cake free. Any one wishing to aid them by contributions of cake or cream will please send them to the church by four o'clock Monday afternoon, and they will be thankfully received. All persons interested in the work of the association are cordially invited to be present. All ladies of whatever denomination, who will assist in serving these refreshments, are requested to meet at the church at four o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

THE BOARD OF EDUCATION ELECTS TEACHERS.

A Full Meeting of the Board Yesterday—Last Year's Work of the Public Schools Highly Satisfactory and the Outlook Encouraging—The Superintendent Re-elected.

The board of education held a meeting yesterday to wind up the business of the past year, elect teachers and make arrangements for the ensuing year. Except Hon. Joseph E. Brown and Hon. N. J. Hammond, the whole board was present, as follows: Messrs. Mayer, Hemphill, Roach, Glenn, Smith, Moran, Beattie, Blanchard, Lowry, Rawson and Hillyer.

Resolutions were adopted directing the committees on repairs and supplies, whose duty it will be to have all needed repairs en school buildings made, and to provide all necessary furniture, during the vacation, so that everything will be in readiness for the opening of the public schools next fall.

A proposition to add a professor of music to the faculty was introduced, but action upon it was postponed until the next meeting.

A resolution was introduced providing for the payment of a fixed salary monthly to supernumerary teachers, which also went over till next meeting.

Salaries for the next year remain unchanged except in a single instance, the pay of the principal of Calhoun street school being raised from $600 to $900.

LAST YEAR'S GOOD WORK.

The work of the public schools during the past year has been most satisfactory, and the outlook for next term is highly encouraging. During the year there has been an average of 5,500 pupils in attendance on the schools. The progress in all branches have been gratifying. no epidemics have interfered with the regular course, and the result of the year's work was regarded with pleasure hy members of the board.

SUPERINTENDENT SLATON RE ELECTED.

The elections resulted in the retention of the old teachers except in one or two instances. Superintendent Slaton was unanimously re-elected to the position which he has filled with so much credit to himself and satisfaction to the public, and enjoys the fullest confidence of the board. He is the right man in the right place and will devote his energies and talents to making next year more successful than any former one in the history of the public schools.

WHO THE TEACHERS ARE.

The board expressed confidence in the teachers in all the grades, and though there were many applications for the places only four new ones were elected—Miss Moss Harris in the High school, Mrs. E. C. Edwards in Calhoun street school, Miss Annie Titlebaum in Marietta street school, and Miss J. Ketchum in the Walker street school. To the supernumeraries Miss Sallie Ford was added, a young lady possessing high qualifications as a teacher, and one who will be heard from in the future successes of the public schools. The elections of each school resulted as follows:

NEW SCHOOL FACILITIES NEEDED.

The new school building in the first ward, an appropriation for which is now being asked before city council, is much needed. Last year there were 200 pupils turned away for want of accommodations, and the number of applicants will be largely increased next year. The new building ought to be provided in time for the fall opening of the schools.

The Niagara of the South.

Tallulah Falls, the Niagara of the south, is now open for visitors. The Cliff house and cottages, under management of F. H. & F. B. Scofield, late of Hotel Kaaterskill, Catskill mountain, New York, have ample accommodation for persons wishing to spend the summer at this delightful resort. These cottages are new and attractive, and will be taken at once. Write soon so as not to be disappointed.

JACK'S BREAD BOOM.

What Started It, Who Started It, and All About It.

Boom! Boom!
Still it goes on.
The great Bread Boom.
Do you remember the recent bread war?
Who was the victor?
It was Jack.
There was a time when the people of Atlanta bitterly and justly complained of the poor bread that was being given them.
Jack made pure bread.
Today he is the superintendent of the Capital City Steam Bakery Company, and the manufacturer of the celebrated Cream Bread.
This Cream Bread was a great thing for the people of Atlanta.
It started the bread boom, and today you can hear of nothing else in the way of bread.
It is as pure a bread that was ever made.
Everybody likes it.
Have you tried it?
Well, if you havn't, you are behind the times and had better do so at once.
The Capital City Steam Bakery Company is riding on the top wave of success and all its breadstuffs are largely sought after.
It gives better and more bread, and delivers it at your door, for the same amount of money than any bakery in the city.
So much for Jack, the bread king.

Atlanta's Pulpit Orator.

The Knoxville correspondent of the Chattanooga Times thus writes: "That was a remarkable sermon delivered before the students of the university of Tennessee on Sunday night of the 6th instant, by the Rev. Dr. J. B. Hawthorne, of Atlanta, Ga. It was the baccalaureate sermon. He was greeted by one of the largest and most intelligent audiences that, perhaps, ever convened in this city on a similar occasion. Your correspondent has had the pleasure of hearing Beecher and Talmage and other divines of national fame, and must say he has heard none superior to Dr. Hawthorne. He is one of the star preachers of the times, possessing gifts and endowments of a rare nature, and wielding an influence in the American pulpit that few preachers, if any, wield. By the way, had it occurred to you that the Baptist church is today giving to the world some of the most illustrious preachers? They adorn the pulpits of the principal towns, cities and rural districts of the country.

On the Road.

Ivie, the photographer, telegraphs from St. Louis that he has on the road the finest line of photographic scenery ever brought south. This is a perfect guarantee that the people of Atlanta may look for something new and something fine. Mr. Ivie has been attending the meeting of the Photographer's Association of America, and has picked up all the best and finest pieces of scenery he could find. Don't fail to call and see this scenery, at Ivie's on Whitehall street.

This Evening.

If you want to hear good music go to Ponce de Leon this afternoon. The grounds now are in the best of condition. Go out and carry the children, and let them romp and play on the grass. The breeze at the Ponce de Leon is fresher than can be found at the seashore. Go out this afternoon.

THE SOUTHERN LEAGUE.

NASHVILLE DEFEATS THE HOME TEAM IN A CLOSE GAME.

Umpire Burns a Party to the Defeat—Atlanta In the Lead With Nashville a Good Second—The Other Games and How They Came Out—Some Baseball Brevities.

The home team received another defeat yesterday at the hands of the Goldsby aggregation. The game was witnessed by a large crowd, and though the playing was not particularly good, yet the game was not without interest. The umpiring of Mr. Barnes was, to say the least of it, slightly off. He did not seem to be particularly biased, yet he made about ten decisions against Atlanta to one in her favor. He was decidedly off on calling balls and strikes. He seemed as though he thought every ball Baker pitched a strike and those of Shaffer all balls. The Atlanta sluggers got in a couple of three-baggers, while the Nashville team only succeeded in getting four scattering hits off Shaffer, and they were all singles. This is the last game the Atlantas play at home for two weeks, and the audience hated to see them lose the game, although done by the aid of the umpire. All felt that the boys played very well considering the odds they had against them, and everyone were satisfied with what they did. Atlanta has, beyond a doubt, the strongest team in the league, and if the boys will only play ball on their present trip from home, the pennant will again float over the Atlantas. They beat Nashville two out of the four, and yesterday's game, if things had been as they should, would, in all probability, have been won by them. At any rate they retain the first place and are pretty apt to keep it.

Memphis Wins in Chattanooga.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., June 26.—[Special.]—The game today was a fine exhibition of ball playing and was hotly contested to the end, requiring twelve innings to decide the winner. Both pitchers were in good form and received very good support. Memphis won the game by superior coaching and daring base running, and not by hard hitting.

The Boys at Baseball.

COVINGTON, Ga., June 26.—[Special.]—A game of base ball was played here today between the Starvilles and Cedarshoals. The boys were in full uniform, and much interest was manifested. The Cedarshoals were defeated by a score of 38 to 9.

Baseball at the Opera House.

The opera house has been secured, and all the games played by the Atlantas away from home will be reported in detail. Half innings from all the other games will also be posted.

Amateur Game at the Park.

The H. W. Gradys and Americans crossed bats at the park yesterday morning before a good sized audience. The Americans were defeated by a score of 18 to 5.

Baseball Bulletins.

Philadelphia—Athletics 2, Metropolitans 4.
Brooklyn—Brooklyn 1, Baltimore 0.
Kansas City—The Kansas City-New York game postponed on account of rain.
St. Louis—The Boston-St. Louis game postponed on account of rain.
Cincinnati—St. Louis 1, Cincinnati 0.
Chicago—Chicago 5, Philadelphia 1.
Louisville—Louisville 3, Pittsburg 4.
Detroit—Detroit 2, Washington 0.

Diamond Dust.

Purcell and Lyons both got on to Baker for three baggers.

Umpire Morton has resigned his position in the American association.

Shafer, the new player, is going to prove quite an addition to the Atlanta team.

"Tug" Arundel and the Chattanooga club will pass through the city today on their way to Savannah.

Not much is said about Lynch's playing on first, nevertheless, he is the best first baseman in the league.

Stricker is still the boss second baseman, while he did not get in much work yesterday, yet he can do it.

Mappes, of the Atlantas, has caught six consecutive games, and has done some excellent work in the position.

Patsy Cahill writes that he would like very much to come back to Atlanta. Why not secure this noble player?

The Atlanta club has not been hitting the ball in the last two games, and the public would like to know the reason.

The Atlantas have to their credit 215 stolen bases for the present season. This is nearly double the number of any other club.

It is thought that President Proudfit will, at a very early date, appoint Sheridan a Southern league umpire to fill a vacancy soon to occur on the staff.

The Atlanta club leave home in excellent condition, and should play great ball on their southern trip. They open the series in Charleston on Monday.

The board of directors of the Southern league will meet in Macon on Monday at 11 o'clock, at the Brown house. Matters of importance will come before the meeting.

Umpire Burns seems to get very much rattled during the game, and gets away off on balls and strikes. The Nashville club complained a great deal at his umpiring in Atlanta.

The Cincinnati Enquirer says that Louisville paid six hundred dollars for Neal, the Savannah pitcher, and after trying him one game they are willing to sell him for six dollars.

Mr. R. M. Tankersley, the president of the Chattanooga club, will attend the meeting of the board of directors in Macon, and Manager Sneed, of the Memphis club, will represent his city.

Mr. John Morrow, one of the directors of the Nashville club, witnessed the game yesterday afternoon. Mr. Morrow did not show himself in Atlanta until his club succeeded in winning a game, and then he came out of his hiding place. By the way, Mr. Morrow says that Atlanta has a very fine club, and one of the best second basemen in the country.

President Proudfit has ordered the Charleston club to play two deferred games with Atlanta July 3d and 5th. These games will be championship series and will be very interesting, and doubtless a large crowd will visit Atlanta on these dates and witness the games. The fourth of July coming on Sunday, the celebration of the fourth will occurr in Atlanta on Saturday July 3d, or Monday July 5th.

ATLANTA POMOLOGICAL SOCIETY.

Raspberry Culture Discussed at the Meeting Yesterday.

The Atlanta Pomological society held an interesting meeting at the department of agriculture yesterday morning. In the absence of the president, Colonel W. L. Jones, the vice-president presided.

Charles Deckner and D. Morrison were elected members.

The subject for discussion was raspberry culture. Colonel J. J. Toon read on the subject an interesting and instructive paper.

Colonel Mark W. Johnson was appointed to prepare a paper on the causes of decay in early peaches, for the next meeting.

Mr. J. C. Bucher will read a paper on the soil and culture of raspberries at the second meeting in July.

The following additional delegates were elected to attend the meeting of the state horticultural society at Fort Valley:

G. M. Hope, A. R. Pharr, Clark Cole, Charles Deckner, J. J. Doman, L. M. Castles and D. Morrison.

The fruits exhibited were raspberries, grapes and pears. The grapes showed evidences of rot. It was agreed that unless the weather becomes more settled very soon, the grape crop will be badly damaged.

THE IRISH IN ATLANTA.

Judge Lochrane Sends Them Words of Cheer.

The recent turn of events in England has greatly excited the Irish population of Atlanta, as well as their friends. They take a keen interest in the growing prospects of freedom for the Irish nation. Yesterday Mr. Michael Mahoney, president of the local land league, received the following dispatch from Judge Lochrane, who is in New York:

NEW YORK, June 25, 1886.—To M. Mahoney, President Land League: I send you today a check for fifty dollars for the Parnell fund. Victory is certain.
O. A. LOCHRANE.

LIEUTENANT MASTIN L. BRIDWELL.

A Good Citizen Passes to the Beautiful Beyond.

Mr. Mastin L. Bridwell died at his home, Butler street, Thursday night, after an illness of only a few days.

The deceased was lieutenant of the Third Georgia regiment, company G, and was at the time of his death fifty-one years of age. He was a good man and would go as far for a friend as any one. The funeral services will take place this morning at 10 o'clock.

The following members of the Fulton Confederate Veterans' association are selected to accompany the remains of our deceased brother, M. L. Bridwell, to his last resting place. Each member will wear the badge of the association, together with a badge of black and white ribbon, such as is worn on memorial days:

Dr. K. C. Divine, William Hamilton, A. D. Fuller, W. W. Hulbert, H. L. Williams, S. A. Stroud, Eugene P. Black, J. M. B. Carlton, J. F. Jones, D. N. Martin, A. J. Orme, F. M. Meyers, J. C. Hallman, J. C. Hendricks, George C. Bancroft, V. P. Sisson, John V. Bishop, Reuben Arnold, J. Gadsden King, Wm. H. Cody, Charles Le-Fils, E. G. Moore, Robert F. Debelle, T. H. P. Bloodworth, A. R. McCutchen, J. D. Garrison, Henry H. Jones, Marion Gaines, L. P. Thomas, W. C. Dodson, A. L. Holbrook, B. F. Walker, B. F. Hodges, J. A. Hutchison, W. F. Parkhurst.

A Prominent Attorney's Testimony.

DROPSY.—My chestnut pony, six years old, was affected with anasacra (general dropsy.) The case was regarded incurable by several leading veterinary surgeons of the city. Dr. Johnson was called, and he prescribed the use of Caustic Balsam. Two applications of the Balsam were made, 24 hours apart, upon all the limbs, abdomen, chest and throat. In fifteen days the cure was complete.
JUDGE J. K. FORD, Att'y at Law,
117 Public Square, Cleveland, O.

The Caustic Balsam is for sale in Atlanta by Bradfield & Ware, 26 Whitehall street.

AGAINST HIS SECURITIES.

Commercial Bank of Augusta vs. the American Security Company.

In the clerk's office of the superior court a bill was filed yesterday by the Commercial bank of Augusta, vs. the American Security company of New York, having a branch office in this city.

The Commercial bank of Augusta wants the American Security company to pay $1,283 besides interest on a bond, signed, sealed and delivered, on the 15th day of January, 1886, and which the company now refuse to pay. The bond was to continue of force from January 15th '85, to January 15th, 1886, and was given by defendants as security for the faithful discharge of the duties of teller, of the Commercial bank of Benjamin D. Jones, who had been appointed teller, whereby it was declared and agreed that subject to the provisions in said bond contained, the said defendant company should, and would, within three months after notice, accompanied by satisfactory proof of a loss as in said bond mentioned, make good and reimburse the employers of Jones.

The bill alleges that on the 26th of June, 1885, Jones, the teller, was entrusted with sixty-four thousand dollars of the bank's money and he converted the sum of sixteen hundred and odd dollars to his personal use and has failed to account for it. Hence the suit is bright.

Atlanta & Hawkinsville Railroad.

The Incorporators report to THE CONSTITUTION that the Atlanta subscriptions only lack about $15,000 of the amount this city will be called on to subscribe.

They ask the counties between Atlanta and Hawkinsville, through which the road is to pass to do what they can in the next two weeks in securing stock subscriptions, and report amounts of the same, as it is important that the enterprise shall be started at the earliest day possible.

Let the friends of this road remember that Georgia now has six narrow gauge roads, all of them making money, and the bonds of the last one completed, are bringing a handsome premium in the Atlanta market.

The promoters of the Hawkinsville road ask us to say that they are gratified to state that all classes of our people are doing their duty by this enterprise—the lawyers, the business men, the owners of real estate, bankers and brokers.

THE CONSTITUTION knows no reason why this road should not be finished to southwest Georgia in less than twelve months.

Tribute of Respect.

At a meeting of the students of Moore's Business university, held on the 23d inst., the following resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, In view of the loss we have sustained by the death of our friend and fellow Robert L. Durden, which occurred on June ... 1886, and of the still heavier loss sustained by those nearest and dearest to him: therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is but a just tribute to the memory of the departed to say, that in regretting his removal from our midst; we mourn for one who was in every way worthy of our highest respect and esteem.

Resolved, That we sincerely condole with the family of the deceased in the dispensation with which it has pleased Divine Providence to afflict them, who orders all things for the best, and whose chastisements are meant in mercy.

Resolved, That each and every student of this university be requested to wear the usual badge of mourning for ten days.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be published in the Atlanta Journal, Atlanta Evening Capitol and ATLANTA CONSTITUTION, also in the Pine Forest, Swainsboro, Ga., the home paper of our deceased fellow student, and that a copy be sent to his family at Math, Ga.

THE REGULATOR AND CONTROLLER OF LOW PRICES.

THE LITTLE BUSY BEE.

CAPT. JERRY SLADE TELLS ABOUT THE QUEEN.

An Incident that Illustrates the Intelligence of the Bee—The Old and not the Young Hives that Leave the Gum—How Queens are Made, and How They Rule the Household.

From the Columbus, Ga., Sun.

Everybody in Columbus, and a great many people outside of Columbus know that Captain Jerry J. Slade is one of the best educators for boys in the land. He is about as well posted on the majority of subjects as almost any man that can be started. The Enquirer-Sun long ago recognized this fact, but not until yesterday morning did we have any idea that he knew so much about bees, nor, in fact, did we know there was so much to be known about them.

THE QUEEN BEE

furnishes an interesting study. Speaking about the queen bee yesterday, Captain Slade said:

"I wish you could have been out to my house this morning; I would have shown you something that would have been enjoyed."

"What was that?" we asked.

"You are aware, perhaps, that the bee-hives are so arranged that the queen's movements can be easily watched. Well, just before I started into the city this morning I saw a hive of bees preparing to swarm. I went to the hive and securing the queen, clipped her wings so that she could not fly. The swarm came out and settled near by, the queen being the last to leave the old home. She then came out on the starting board, but could not leave. For several minutes messenger bees were dispatched to and from the queen to the swarm, but at last the entire swarm returned to the hive."

"Did the other bees understand?"

"I am confident they did. I am quite certain the queen bee sent a message that she could not come and ordered the return of the other bees."

"How can you tell which is the queen?"

"She is easily distinguished by the length of her body, shortness of wing, together with a certain smoothness and sleek look of her body. She is about one-third longer than the working bee and has a fierce and ugly sting, but will not use it upon any one who handles her; she is as safe to handle as a June bug."

TO CHECK SWARMING.

"It would be a good idea then to clip the queen's wings to prevent the bees from swarming?" suggested the reporter.

"Certainly so. The swarm will, when they get ready to leave, go out and cluster, but as soon at they discover that the queen is detained, messengers and carriers go to and from the cluster to the queen and instantly all hands come flocking back and go into the hive perfectly contented. Only the queen has an ugly piece of work to do on going back. She instantly sets to work to having the young queen cells opened and she stings the young queen to death. This is the only use she ever makes of her sting."

HIVING THE BEES.

'This introduces a new way to hive the bees, does it not, captain?"

"It does. A bee-keeper can take advantage of this swarming and by putting the Clifford queen in a new hive on the old stand can give a swarm a new home, a thing they were looking for, and at the same time he can remove the old hive with its contents of young bees with gum cells to another stand and so swarming is done, and that with no trouble. There need be no more alarm about bees swarming if the movable from hives are used. A little smoke quiets the bee and sets him to eating honey at once. At that pleasant business he is peaceable and will not be roused to resentfulness unless the handling is done nervously and too hurriedly."

'That is decidedly preferable to the old way?" Oh, yes. Tin pans and kettles, plows, water, dust, and the old appliances to bring the fleeing swarm to a cluster may be relegated to the past. Only clip the queen's wing, but be sure she is laying before her wing is clipped, or she will always remain infertile, for she must always meet the drone on the wing.

HOW THEY MAKE QUEENS.

"How do the regular working bees get their queens?"

If the queen is lost by any accident, she may be replaced in a few days, by placing in the queenless hive a frame of comb with eggs that would hatch out workers in the cells, and the workers will take one of these eggs and cut about five cells into one, round this egg, and, as soon as the egg on the third day hatches into a grub, they nurse this grub with extra food of a peculiar kind, causing the grub to take on extra growth. In about nine days they seal up this half-grown bee. They, to make sure of no failure, make often as many as a dozen of these queen cells. The first one of these that hatches out with the aid of the workers goes round to the other queen cells and pulls out the occupant and destroys her, as but one can be queen."

TWO THOUSAND YEARS OLD.

"Is this clipping of the queen's wing a new invention?"

"I thought so until this morning. Supposing it to be an invention of the modern bee keeper, and evidence of the progress of the age, I practiced it with a sort of pride of my country. But what was my mortification in picking up, out of curiosity, one of those difficult books of Virgil, his Georgics, so difficult few schools even read them, to find that the old Latin poet knew all about it two thousand years ago. And lest any one may be incredulous about the fact, I refer him to 4th Georgic 103 to 108 lines, a close translation of which is as follows:

"But when the roving swarms fly about and sport in the air, disdain their hives and leave their habitations cold, you will restrain their unsettled minds from their vain play. Nor is there great difficulty in restraining them, do you but clip the wings of their kings—'tu regibus alas eripe'—not one will dare while they (the kings) stay behind to fly aloft, or pluck up the standard from the camp."

"I only feel a little compensated for my discomfiture," said Captain Slade, "in finding out that I know they are queen bees and the old poet thought they were kings. Let no one console himself that he knows it all."

THE MOTHER OR SISTER OF ALL.

"Coming back to the queen bee, she is not closely related to the other bees."

"She is the mother or sister of the working bees, and the workers are all females but are infertile. At maturity the queen weds once, and then her business is to lay eggs—her sister's to work. Each pursues her avocation to death—the queen living from two to three years and the working bees hardly as many months. They wear out their wings with work and then crawl away from the hive and die alone. When their wings are worn out they refuse to eat and thus perish."

Hark! Hear the roar in the distance! It's the "RED LION," the King of Tonics, etc., etc.

TUTT'S PILLS

TORPID BOWELS, DISORDERED LIVER, and MALARIA.

From these sources arise three-fourths of the diseases of the human race. These symptoms indicate their existence: Loss of Appetite, Bowels costive, Sick Headache, fullness after eating, aversion to exertion of body or mind, Eructation of food, Irritability of temper, Low spirits, A feeling of having neglected some duty, Dizziness, Fluttering at the Heart, Dots before the eyes, highly colored Urine, CONSTIPATION, and demand the use of a remedy that acts directly on the Liver. As a Liver medicine TUTT'S PILLS have no equal. Their action on the Kidneys and Skin is also prompt; removing all impurities through these three "scavengers of the system," producing appetite, sound digestion, regular stools, a clear skin and a vigorous body. A very happy marriage was celebrated at the residence of Mr. James O. White, uncle of the bride, at 73 Davis street, at 3 o'clock Thursday afternoon, 24th instant. The contracting parties were Dr. J. Wylie Smith and Miss Emma E. Freeman. The marriage ceremony was performed by Rev. H. J. Ellis in a beautiful and impressive manner. Only the immediate relatives and a very few select friends of the bridal pair were present. The groom is a promising young physician living at West End, and one who has already won an enviable reputation in the practice of his profession. The bride is one of the most loveable and lovely young ladies in Atlanta, possessing in an unwonted degree those charms of mind and heart which make woman admired and loved. There can be but one outcome of a marriage between such a couple—that is a life of unalloyed happiness. The happy pair start in their married life with the earnest wishes of many friends for their future happiness, and misgivings in the minds of none.

The Ylo literary society, one of the strongest and best societies in the city, met Thursday evening at the residence of Mr. Madison Bell, on Luckie street. An excellent programme, consisting of music and recitations, had been prepared, and it was rendered in a manner which met with approval from all. One of the most interesting features of the programme was a short lecture on phrenology by Mr. Wm. Brenner. The lecture was one of the greatest interest, and was highly entertaining. Mr. Brenner is a gentleman of high culture and handled his subject in a creditable manner. An instrumental solo, concert waltz was played by Miss Adams. The selection is a beautiful one. Miss Adams had a splendid conception of the piece and her rendition of it was well nigh perfect. All in all the programme was very interesting, and the audience applauded without stint. The following are the officers for the next term: President, Mr. Sam Wall; vice-president, Miss Brener; secretary and treasurer, Miss Lola Camp.

A literary entertainment was given by the society of the Pierce church, on Tuesday evening, at the residence of Mr. Frank A. Crawford, on Smith street. A short programme had been arranged for the evening and was carried out in full. The recitation of Archie Dean, by Miss Abbie Dean, was very good. Miss Dean has a good voice, and her gestures were perfect. Miss Della Girardeau read Charley McCree. The selection was well suited to Miss Girardeau and she read it excellently. The guests dispersed at a late hour with regret that the time for departure had come. The society will hold their next meeting at Mrs. E. G. Hall's, on Rawson street.

Miss Annie Raine, who has just returned home from school in Staunton, Va., entertained a number of friends at her home on Peachtree street Tuesday evening. It was a reunion of friends and the evening was most pleasantly spent by all present. At ten o'clock the guests repaired to the dining room where a sumptuous refast was spread, and the hour spent at supper was full of happiness. Miss Raine is a perfect hostess, and her efforts that all should have an enjoyable time were crowned with success. The young ladies present were: Miss Annie Raine, Miss Mary Love Goodwin, Savannah, Misses Lee, St. Paul, Min., Miss Sallie Fannie Grant, Miss Maud Barker, Miss Cornelia Jackson, Miss Isma Dooly, Miss Nellie Inman, Miss Effie Howell. The following young gentlemen attended: Mr. B. O. Wallace, Chattanooga, Tenn., Mr. Henry Inman, Mr. Pryor L. Mynatt, Jr., Mr. Will R. Prescott, Mr. John W. Sanders, Mr. Walter Inman, Mr. Isaac W. Lovejoy, Mr. Joe Nash and Mr. James L. Riley.

Beautiful invitations are out to the marriage of Miss Estelle Winn, daughter of Colonel Sam J. Winn, of Laurenceville, to Mr. Charles H. Brand, one of the most prominent young attorneys of that place. The wedding will take place next Wednesday evening, June 30th, at 9 o'clock, at the Methodist church in Lawrenceville, and will be a notable social event. After the wedding a reception will be tendered Mr. and Mrs. Brand at the elegant home of Colonel and Mrs. Winn. Mr. Brand is a graduate of the State university of the class of 1881, and is one of the most promising young attorneys of the state. He is chairman of the democratic executive committee of Gwinnett county, and has the confidence of all who know him. Both he and Miss Winn have many friends in Atlanta.

Wednesday evening last a pleasant evening was spent at the residence of Mr. R. A. Varnadoe, Fair street. It was a gathering of a few friends of the family to witness the presentation of a gold-headed cane to Hon. Albert H. Cox, who so nobly represented young Calvin Varnadoe in his recent troubles.

Ween the friends had gathered, Mr. George B. Forbes, who is with Mr. Varnadoe in the clerk's office, arose and said:

The happiest moments in a man's life is when he is doing acts of kindness from purely unselfish motives; and almost as happy moments when he is the recipient of a token that such favors are appreciated. It is my pleasant duty on this occasion to be the medium of presenting you this small token of appreciation from the mother and sisters for your kindness and able service in behalf of the son and brother, with the wish that your life may be filled with good deeds, and in the end a proper commendation and reward for your services, I present you with this cane from the mother and sisters with the simple but sweet inscription, "With Affection."

Colonel Cox was completely taken back. He did not know what to say, and it was sometime before he could respond, and when he did it was very briefly.

After this refreshments were served, and then music and social conversation occupied the greater portion of the evening.

Miss Ida Ryan, one of Atlanta's most popular young ladies, has just returned from Georgetown, D. C., where, for the past three years, she has been attending the Visitation convent. Miss Ryan took quite a high stand in her class, and, in fact, has taken more medals than has ever before been received by one pupil. She secured three medals: In the one offered for the highest stand in mathematics the medal for proficiency in music, and the medal offered for best class stand, or first honor. This is certainly a fine record, and Miss Ryan's many friends will hear of her success with much pleasure.

THROUGH THE STATE.

What the Society People Have Been and Contemplate Doing.

Augusta.

The most brilliant society event that has occured here for months took place last evening at the Clara hall. It has seemed for some weeks that our society folks were tired of the brilliancy of the ball room, and germans and receptions to a great extent have been supplanted by picnics and lawn parties. However, society has taken another start, and last evening demonstrated the fact that even now the devotees of the german can be brought out with a simple announcement. The german was given by the Augusta German club, complimentary to Miss Mamie Coates, a beautiful and popular young lady of Baltimore, who is spending some time with her friend, Miss Hattie Barrett, [of] this city. There have been few germans given [in] this city that equalled this in brilliancy, and never has such a number of beautiful and brilliant young ladies assembled at one entertainment. Among the young ladies present there were none more admired than Miss Coates, who is a charming and cultured young lady, and Miss Hattie Barrett, one of Augusta's most popular young ladies. The figures were lead by Mr. W. H. Barrett. He introduced several new and beautiful figures, and to him is due much of the success and pleasure of the german. The favors were exquisite. Among the toilettes were some of the handsomest ever seen in the city. There were several couples present from the neighboring cities. Among those present were:

Mr. Edwin Kerrison with Miss Coates, Mr. C. F. Moses with Miss Bessie Dawson, Mr. F. M. Butt with Miss Annie McV[i]rter, Mr. L. M. Fleming with Miss Mamie Du[...], Mr. W. V. Martin with Miss Susie Wallace, [...] Phinizy with Miss Marie Allen, Dr. N. A[...] with Miss Rebie Vason, Mr. Henry [...] Miss Sallie Dunbar, Mr. Cas. Lamar [...] Miss Frankie Ford, Mr. Wm. Montgomery with Miss Mamie Williams, Mr. F. K. Nixon with Miss Emma Carroll, Mr. David Twiggs with Miss Annie Mays, Mr. H. M. North with Miss Hattie Barrett, Mr. T. C. Vason with Miss May Wallace, Mr. Henry Cranston with Miss Emma Williams, Mr. L. L. Fleming with Miss Lizzie Winter, Mr. E. T. Miller with Miss Rosa North, Mr. A. G. Ganahl with Miss Carrie Carter, Mr. T. W. Alexander with Miss Walton, Mr. J. C. Cranston with Mrs. F. W. Foster, Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Cohen, Mr. P. B. Tobin with Miss Jennie Cumming, Mr. J. B. Walker with Miss Jennie D'Antignac, Mr. Mont Moses with Miss Mary Smith, Mr. and Mrs. W. K. Miller, Mr. and Mrs. John D. Twiggs. The stags were Mr. Jeff Davis, Mr. Charles Coates, of Baltimore; Mr. Claude Hammond, of Beech Island; Mr. John Phinizy, Mr. J. P. Bones, Mr. Charles Turpin, Mr. W. H. Barrett, Mr. G. H. Nixon, and Robert Taylor, of Athens.

At one o'clock a delightful repast was served, after which a few more figures were, and then at a very late hour, the guests dispersed. The [ger]man was said by all to have really been the [most] brilliant ever given in the city.

Albany.

A marriage full of interest to Albany socie[ty] was that of Rev. W. L. Pickard, of the Southern Baptist Theological seminary, to Miss Florrie M. Willingham, the accomplished and beautiful daughter of Thomas H. Willingham, a leading, and widely known citizen, on the 15th. The Baptist church was beautifully decorated and crowded by the elite of Albany to witness the ceremony, which was performed by Dr. M. B. Wharton, pastor of the First Baptist church of Montgomery, Ala., in his best style. The wedding supper at the attractive home of the bride was one of the finest ever spread in the city, and the gifts of the bride costly and beautiful. Mr. Pickard is pronounced the finest orator of his class of one hundred students and is destined to make his mark.

Adairsville.

Mrs. T. B. Gremmer and children, of Bainbridge, are in the city, stopping with Mrs. J. B. Jones, Mrs. Gremmer's stepmother.

The jolly and clever Ed Frizzell, of Atlanta, spent Monday among his friends here. "Friz" is a stauch Gordon man and was perfectly elated at the result of Saturday's meeting.

Captain McD. Jones is off this week on a business trip to Macon and Atlanta. Captain Jones has been the popular conductor on the Blakeley extension since the completion of the road here until very recently, when he was summarily discharged, the road assigning no reason whatever fer their action. The friends of Captain Jones, regarding him as they do, one of the most faithful officers, hope to see him soon reinstated

A very pleasant musical entertainment was given at the Livingstone house on Tuesday night last. Among those present we remember now the following: Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Cook, Mr. and Mrs. Johns, Mrs. B. Hartwell.

The closing exercises of the Hartwell high school were enlivened by an eloquent address by Mr. James F. O'Neill, of Atlanta. When being introduced by Hon. A. G. McCurry, he was greeted with cheers and numerous floral offerings. He said in effect that he did not propose to set himself up as an adviser or a guide; that was for men older and more experienced, and was, besides, useless. His object was to meet the growing tendency of the age to depreciate the higher education, have as a means and as our end, and his object was to speak especially in reference to such a condition of things at the south. Drawing a picture of the refinement and cultivation existing under the social system of the old south and its destruction by the new, he passed to the birth and growth of the new south just now beginning to increase its powers with the rest of the country. He argued that whatever might be its material wealth or enterprise, these alone would not enable it to regain its old supremacy and to meet the great development of the north in many other things besides mere material prosperity; that, after all, money and commercial enterprise were but the mere lovers of civilization and progress, and that those who wished them must have qualifications elsewhere retained, i. e., from the cultivation of the mental faculties, with which we would be little better than compeers of those who live in the barbaric magnificence of the oriental matrons. He commented on the lack of southern literature, mentioning the absence of writers, who alone could truly represent life, manners and resources of the south in opposition to those who traduced her, and closed by saying that even as an end the acquisition of the higher intellectual culture was worthy of the earnest efforts of men so endowed as to use them well, and hoped that the south would one day fully realize it.

TRUSSES NEVER CURE, BUT THEY SUBJECT THE WEARER TO STRANGULATED

with all its horrors, being equalled only by hydrophobia. No matter how strong one may be, rupture is a lurking enemy, undermining the constitution and unfitting its victim for all the physical and social enjoyments of life. The displacement of the bowel in rupture and the use of the truss affect the kidneys, bladder and other organs till impotency, impaired memory, fevers Bright's diseases and other mortifying ailments are induced.

DR. J. A. SHERMAN, well known throughout this country and the West Indies, through his successful method of curing rupture, is now at his New York office, 294 Broadway, where he may be daily consulted.

In his treatment there is no operation, no restriction from labor, but comfort and restoration from all the ailments caused by rupture and the use of trusses.

Dr. Sherman's pamphlet, containing indorsements from physicians, clergymen, merchants, farmers and others who have been cured, is mailed for 10c.

FINANCE AND COMMERCE

Bonds, Stocks and Money.

CONSTITUTION OFFICE,
ATLANTA, June 26, 1886.

The amount of money seeking safe investment grows in volume, and the few good securities offered find ready buyers.

The inquiry for Atlanta and West Point debentures, Southwestern and Georgia railroad stock, Atlanta city and all classes of Georgia state bonds is unprecedented, and if our market afforded a supply business would be brisk, but the supply is not forthcoming, consequently brokers are not getting rich very fast.

The new securities offering are attracting more attention, and some of them will doubtless soon be quite as popular as the older ones. Marietta and North Georgia bonds, as they are better known, are being bought in quite satisfactory amounts, and we predict for them, on their merits, a rising future.

This reminds us that our Atlanta and Hawkinsville friends are up and doing. Stock subscriptions are being made here and coming in from all along the line quite encouragingly; and, with the benefits to be derived from so small an investment, it don't seem possible that our people will let this opportunity go by. What Baltimore has done in a very large way by building and retaining control of the Baltimore and Ohio road may be accomplished by Atlanta quite as effectively by building the Atlanta and Hawkinsville as a starter, and as opportunity offers adding to the system. Time will be required to do this, but persistence, pluck and sense will bring it about, and there have been frequent demonstrations of the fact that our people possess those elements.

The Central railroad sensation has either died out or gone to sleep, and Captain Caoul may again be at ease, for the gobblers won't gobble him up this summer.

We are informed that recently one of the strongest banking institutions in Georgia offered 107 and accrued interest for $50,000 Georgia 4½ per cent bonds, but failed to get them. This shows the faith of home people in these bonds, and our recent prediction of 110 or higher for them will be verified before many weeks.

NEW YORK STOCKS.

Stocks as Reported at the New York Stock Exchange.

NEW YORK, June 26.—The rise yesterday was deemed somewhat unnatural, and at least unwarranted. The troubles in the west, coupled with the heavy gold shipments, would naturally have prevented a rise, the bulls claim, however, that the rise was caused by the covering of short contracts. The cutting of freight rates in the west has now reached a point where it can no longer be concealed, and an open fight is likely to be announced at any moment. At the opening almost everything was high, the advances ranging from ⅛ to ½ per cent. The early dealings were marked by considerable feverishness, and although there were some light advances, in which Lake Shore was conspicuous, the market soon gave way and material declines were made by noon. There was no movement during the afternoon beyond a slight rally toward the close. First prices show irregular changes of only fractional amounts for most of the active list. Omaha preferred, however, shows a decline of 1 per cent, and Richmond and West Point an advance of 1⅛. Sales only 184,000 shares.

NEW YORK, June 26—C. L. Green & Co., in their report on cotton futures today, say: Shorts continued active today, transferring their attentions largely to August, with values stimulated 7@9 points, and a great many contracts were taken care of. At the advance, however, the bull pool commenced to sell with some freedom, leading to a reaction and an unsettled feeling at the close. The late months gained 4@5 points slowly, but the advanced rates, coupled with fine reports, brought out marked evidence of a desire to sell, and the demand proved very limited.

NEW YORK, June 26—The total visible supply of cotton for the world is 1,949,777 bales, of which 1,392,977 bales are American, against 1,933,929 bales and 1,361,029 respectively last year. Receipts at all interior towns 6,025 bales. Receipts from plantations 5,721. Crop in sight 6,425,026 bales.

THE CHICAGO MARKET.

Features of the Speculative Movement [illegible]

Grain and Produce.

Special to The Constitution.

CHICAGO, June 26—There was moderate trading in wheat without any new or important features being developed. Foreign advices again quoted a dull and easy feeling, but it was estimated that the visible supply would disclose a decrease of fully 1 to 2 million bushels, which had a tendency to sustain values. Prices advanced ¼c over the closing figures of yesterday, but fell off again under free offerings and closed ⅛@¼c under yesterday.

Trading in both corn and oats was light, and prices showed little change.

Speculation in provisions was active, and mess pork advanced 10@12½c, but broke off 17½@20, rallied 2½@5c and closed steady.

Lard was firm and showed little change.

STEAMSHIP "TRAVE."

A MAGNIFICENT SPECIMEN OF THE SHIPBUILDER'S WORK.

Interesting Description of the Equipment—The Cabin—A Palace of Luxury—The Engine Room and Fixtures—Prevention Against Fire—Other Points of Interest.

Messrs. R. D. Mann & Co., the agents for the North German Lloyd steamship company, have furnished THE CONSTITUTION with the following interesting description of the new steamship "Trave":

The new North German Lloyd steamship Trave is built by the Fairfield shipbuilding and engineering company (John Elder & Co.), Govan, Glasgow, and is of the following dimensions: Length, 500 feet; breadth, 48 feet; depth, 36 feet 3 inches; 6,000 tons and 8,000 horse power. The upper and main decks are of teak, and all deck houses, etc., are of steel and teak. Strongly constructed turtle-decks are placed at both ends of the ship. The vessel will accommodate 224 first-class, 94 second-class and 850 third-class passengers, and officers and crew to the number of 170. The first-class passengers are accommodated on the main deck, the dining saloon being forward on the engines and boilers. The saloon is fitted up in a very elaborate manner, and is about 50 feet long and 46 feet broad, and lighted by an open well from the ladies' saloon on the upper deck, with a large cupola skylight above, extending up through the promenade deck. The interior fittings and ornaments of the first cabin saloon, ladies cabin and forward smoking room are the work of the best decorators and artists of Germany. The sides of the first cabin dining saloon are divided into cozy niches and corners by projecting partitions, affording small parties separate dining apartments, as it were, rich hangings and portiere Venetian blue velvet and brocade hiding these niches and corners. The woodwork of the saloon is of walnut and gold, the hangings of blue silk velvet, and the floor of the saloon covered with soft carpets. The well leading up to the skylight is decorated with excellent paintings, masterpieces of Munich artists, the chief paintings representing the four periods of the day in allegorical female figures. Morning, rising above the dawn and scattering blooms; Noon, resplendent in golden rays on the background of heaven; Evening, sinking in shadows, and Night, gathering sleeping children in her shrouding veil. The ladies' cabin leads the well from saloon to skylight, and is fitted in blue plush and velvet. The two state rooms are of walnut with Japanese leather tapestry.

The second-class dining saloon is on the main deck and is lighted by an open well from the saloon on the upper deck, with a large skylight above. Amidships there is a promenade deck about two hundred feet long, which is intended for the exclusive use of the first-class passengers. A smoking room for the second class passengers is fitted abaft the engine room. Accomodation is found for the third class passengers on the lower deck. Special attention has been paid to the ventilation, a most important matter in a large passenger ship. The interior of the ship is complete, with all the latest improvements, having steam windlass, steam and hand steering gear, steam and hand mooring gear, bilge pumps, steam Downton pumps for fire and wash deck purposes, fresh water condensers, steel lifeboats, a large number of life rafts—in fact all that will ensure the safety of the ship at sea, the working of cargo, and comfort of passengers. The vessel is rigged with four pole masts of steel with yards on the foremasts. The Trave's engines and those of her sister vessel, the Aller, are the largest "tripple-expansion" engines that have yet been constructed, and the arrangement of the machinery throughout presents several novel features. The high pressure cylinder is forty-four inches diameter, the intermediate pressure seventy inches diameter and the low pressure 100 inches diameter, each of which is adapted for a stroke of six feet. All the cylinders are fitted with equilibrium piston valves, which are placed above the cylinders, and worked by the "Bryce Walker" patent valve gear.

The reversing of the engines is effected by steam and hydraulic reversing engines. The crank shaft, which is built, is in three pieces, each being interchangable with the other. The crank shaft, tunnel, propeller shafts are all made of steel. The first time in the mercantile service of working steam and bilge pumps by the main engines has been departed from, and the arrangement adopted which is now universal in the British navy—of working them by separate engines. In this case the feed, bilge and sanitary pumps are all worked by a set of triple-expansion engine. The propeller has four blazes of manganese bronze. This metal is now universally adopted by the North German Lloyd company for all the propeller blades on their Atlantic steamers. The boilers for supplying steam to the engines are six in number; they are multitubular, and are fired at both ends. Each boiler is 14 feet and 2 inches in diameter, and 18 feet 9 inches long and has three patent corrugated furnaces—in all 36. The boilers are constructed entirely of steel, and are for a working pressure of 150 pounds per square inch. The Trave contains 33 independent sets of engines with 65 cylinders for driving the screw, the pumps, the ventilating fans, the electric lights, feed pumps, bilge pumps, to work the throttle valve, reverse the engines, turn the engines in port and for other purposes. In case of fire, hose can be attached to any of twenty-six various places on and below deck in a few minutes, and steam can be turned on to all parts of the ship. All compartment bulkheads are closed with water-tight steel and iron doors that are so arranged as to cut through any obstacle, such as coal or wood, that may obstruct their closing. The doors are opened and closed from the deck, and an indicator under the eyes of the officer on the deck shows the officer whether the doors are open or shut. While the steamer was on the ways before launching each compartment was pumped full of water separately, in order to prove the strength of the component parts of the bulkheads and they stood the strain admirably. The electric light is used for top light and side lights instead of oil, and in order to obviate any sudden cessation of the electrical current, the lights is fed from storage batteries that contain a supply of electricity for eighteen hours. The Trave is commanded by Captain Willigerod, one of the veteran captains of the North German Lloyd.

It's a fact that more "RED LION" dollar bottles of Elixir are sold than the 25c size, which is not the case with other medicine. It speaks well for it.

CONTINUATION
—AT—REGENSTEIN'S
MILLINERY EMPORIUM!

DOWN. DOWN. DOWN.
DOWN AGAIN WITH PRICES!

Previous to taking stock on the 1st we wish to reduce still further our enormous stock, and consequently we have made up the following

GREAT BARGAINS!

HATS.

1,000 Ladies' Dress Hats, White and Colored Needle Straws, Union Milans, Pearls, Tramway and other Fancy Straws, all of the Very Latest Shapes and Styles. — Former prices ranged from 40 to 75c, reduced to 25C.

1,200 Ladies' and Misses' White and Light Colored Hats in Tapes, Chips, Fancy Braids, American Milans, etc., etc. Beautiful Goods. Exquisite Styles. — Regular prices were 60c to $1.25, reduced to 40C.

800 Ladies', Misses' and Children's White and Colored English Milans, Finest Braids. Most Stylish Shapes. Prime Stock. — Sold elsewhere now at from $1.75 to $2.25. Our price this week 75C.

This is putting the knife into prices. No imaginary reductions, but real, genuine, bona fide slaughter of goods, which means a loss of from 50 to 75 per cent to us. But as our customers will reap the benefit of our loss, we are consoled.

FLOWERS.

1,200 Montures of Flowers, splendid goods, former price 25c., reduced to 5c.
520 Bunches of Flowers, fine sprays and clusters, former price 40c., reduced to 10c.
480 Imported Montures, elegant goods, former price 50c., reduced to 15c.
600 exquisite French Montures, best grades, former price $1.00, reduced to 25c.

Such an opportunity to purchase fine Flowers for next to nothing may never again be offered, but we are going to take stock in a few days, and we are determined to UNLOAD OUR LARGE STOCK. LADIES, DON'T FAIL TO TAKE ADVANTAGE OF THIS GREAT SACRIFICE!

THE COMBAULT'S

CAUSTIC BALSAM!

Is undoubtedly the most valuable and reliable Veterinary Remedy ever discovered. It has superseded the Actual Cautery or hot iron; produces more than four times the effect of a blister; takes the place of all liniments, and is the safest application ever used, as it is impossible to produce a scar or blemish with it. It is a powerful, active, reliable and safe remedy that can be manipulated at will for severe or mild effect. Thousands of the best Veterinarians and Horsemen of this country testify to its many wonderful cures and its great practical value. It is also the most economical remedy in use, as one tablespoonful of Caustic Balsam will produce more actual results than a whole bottle of any liniment or spavin cure mixture ever made. Price $1.50. Sold by druggists, or sent, charges paid, by LAWRENCE, WILLIAMS & CO., Sole Importers and Proprietors, Cleveland, Ohio. None genuine without it has our signature on the label.

Consider These Points.

1.—We ask that you bring this advertisement with you and point out prices. We'll show the goods every time.

2.—We advertise to beat everybody on what we advertise.

3.—We never advertise what we do not keep.

4.—When we say certain goods were bought in

JOB LOTS,

that means they were bought away down at a sacrifice, and that YOU, as a buyer, get the benefit of that sacrifice. We make about the same per cent of Profit on all Lines.

5.—We don't have heavy

LEADERS

to attract attention.

Everything
IS A LEADER.

6.—When we say

BARGAINS,

you can stake all that you're worth that they ARE bargains and

Nothing Else.

Last Week our sales were unprecedentedly

HEAVY.

It was due to the fact that we set before the public a

GENUINE FEAST
—OF—
Bargains,

and the public came in and took them away by wagon loads. You see, our methods are Entirely Our Own.

We don't ape anybody in anything. Our style of advertising is original. It is to the point. It covers the ground, and the public still reposes faith in our word. We have set out to do the

Square Thing,

and it's the square thing you get from us. We pay cash for this space, and talk to the public as we want to. This week we say, without reservation, is our Grandest Week of Bargains for the Year.

Now to buckle down to business. Read our prices just as we quote them, and if we fail to produce all these things and more, why take our head for a

FOOTBALL
—AND—
Kick it Hard.

D. H. Doughert y & Co.

Here is our pot pouri. It is a general mixture of bargains. We begin with

UNLAUNDRIED SHIRTS,

25c, 50c and $1 for Men's Unlaundried Shirts. These three numbers we challenge opposition in, and you will be astonished at the finish and quality of the 25c number. We guarantee to sell more shirts than any two houses in Atlanta, but let them puff.

BARGAINS IN JEANS.

20, 25 and 50c for Jeans; awful cheap; big values. The 20c number is cheap at 35c.

CASSIMERES.

Cassimeres at 40, 50, 60 and 75c and upwards. We are doing a big business here; they are not trash, but good goods at low prices.

PRINTS! PRINTS!

3½ and 5c for Prints. Good goods and choice styles.

FIGURED MUSLINS.

3½c for Figured Muslins worth 5c. Just think!

5c at this price our Figured Muslin is as good as any in the market for 8½c.

MEN'S OVERALLS.

25c for good Overalls, all perfect and cut full size.

25c for good Over Shirts, all perfect and cut full size.

Most of you know the value of such goods as you buy; so we give you the prices and you can judge the rest. We only say that all our goods are perfect.

UNDERWEAR.

15 cents for gents gauze vests		The gents at 15 and 25c and ladies' at 25c are the biggest values in this country.

SUSPENDERS FOR MEN

10, 15, 25 and 35c, these for numbers are especially cheap, and are worth just twice what we ask for them.

TABLE LINENS.

25, 40, 50 and 60c, at these price we are selling a pure line in Linen Bleach Damask, 58 inches wide, Don't forget that they are 58 inches wide and that they are all flax. We have issued for the benefit of opposition special season tickets to the rear. However, they are permitted to keep under the customs from the rear during the campaign. 61c for solid Chambray in pink, blue and brown. These goods were sold by us during the early season at 10c.

GINGHAMS! GINGHAMS!

8½, 10, 12½c—At these prices our Ginghams, in dress plaids, are cheap and awfully pretty.

12½c for the handsomest line of Crinkled Seersuckers ever shown by big odds.

TOWELS AT 8 1-3 CENTS

8½c—See our Towels at this price, and you will say go no further. They are PURE LINEN.

10c—10c for the Largest Flax Towel in America, for the money. These goods are better than anything formerly sold by us at 20c.

FANS!

We have these goods in great variety, and the prices are a real novelty to Atlanta, so are the fans. They are going at YOUR OWN PRICE.

PARASOLS!

Big Stock of new goods, prices off; a regular matinee in this department for the next ten days; a real bone picking—for it is said that the most is sweetest nearer the bone.

NAPKINS!

75c—Our Napkin at this price is our former $1.00.

$1.00—Our Napkins at this price is our former $1.50.

The above are goods received by us during the last thirty days. They are new; for mercy's sake if you need the goods, take them; but don't ask if we bought them.

LACES!

The deck will be swept of these goods during the next few days. Now is your time.

The goods are mostly new.

TABLE FELTING!

Felt for under Table Covering. These are useful and desirable goods.

3 1-2 CENTS.

3½c for a Brocade Dress Goods, in good styles. We guarantee them all to be pure, genuine cotton, honest!

CHILDREN'S CAPS.

Lace and Mull Caps for children, young ladies and young men. We believe our prices the lowest.

BLACK CASHMERES!

We think we can save you considerable money in these goods. Anyhow, we are willing to risk a comparison with New York samples.

HARD-HEADED.

25c—We are a little hard-headed on gents White Unlaundried Shirts at this price. We are willing that you compare this with the best 75c shirt in the market.

MORE DAMASK.

Don't forget our 58 inch Bleached Damask, 25c.

Don't forget our Ladies' Lisle Thread Hose at 25c, in black and colors.

Don't forget our gent's Overalls at 25c, for they beat the world.

ANOTHER HIT.

Figured Linen Lawns, 15c, formerly 20c.

PREPARE FOR RAIN.

$1.00 for a beautiful silver-colored Gossamer for ladies. We sold these goods last season at $1.75 each.

VARIETY PRICES.

10c for a good Hoop-skirt.

5c and 6½c for good yard-wide Bleaching.

5 and 6½c for good yard-wide Sea Island.

3½, 5, 8 and 10c for beautiful Victoria Lawn.

5, 7½ and 10c—At these figures our checked Nainsook are exceedingly good value.

Don't forget our drive in figured Linen Lawn at 15c, reduced from 20c—goods and styles perfect.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

We have one lot of Remnants in White Goods accumulated from our trade. We don't claim anything for these goods, only that they are remnants and in our way, and we are going to sell them Monday morning at half price. This is no dodge to get you in, for these goods are not worth much, but may be used to advantage in families.

SHOES FOR ALL.

Our hand-made shoes for Ladies, Misses and Children are the best in the United States. They are thirty-three per cent cheaper. We make them good with a new pair if they rip

5 CENTS!

Just one more case of those beautiful lace checked Nun's Veiling, and if bought regular our price would be 12½c.

HOW'S THIS?

25c For a 58-inch Bleached Damask, warranted all pure linen. You can't find them anywhere else in the world at this price, and when these are gone we will have no more at this price.

DRESS GOODS.

We have some choice things in this line which we are selling cheap. All woolen goods, chopped in two.

BRIC-A-BRAC BARGAINS.

Beautiful Button Gimps, Fringes, Etc.

5c for a Cloth Slipper.

20c for a nice Corset.

40c. At this price we sell a superb Silk Embroidered Corset, worth 50c.

25c for a good Cloth Slipper.

25c for a good Carpet Slipper.

BLACK CRAPES.

We keep Courtauld's all Pure Silk Crapes. These goods have no equal. They range in price at 75c, $1.00, $1.50, $2.00, $2.50, $3.00 and $4.00 per yard. They never fade or change color.

$2.00 SHOE CHALLENGE.

25c For a Lady's Superb Quality Lisle Hose in black, brown, navy and cardinal. These cannot be bought regular and sold for less than 40 to 50c.

25c for ladies' ingrain hose, full, regular made. These goods are cheap at 40c a pair.

We are having a big run in this department, and many lines of goods at about half our former prices.

HANDKERCHIEFS.

Don't fail to stop at our Handkerchief department. Think of a good handkerchief at 1½c, in white and colored bordered.

5, 10, 15 and 25c. At these prices our ladies and gents' handkerchiefs are 25 per cent under former prices.

OUR WHITE GOODS DEPARTMENT

Is attracting many customers, caused by the very low prices ruling in those very seasonable goods, but the season to sell that class of goods is so short we do not care to carry any over, consequently the prices are so very low they will be sold at the benefit of consumers.

2½ CENTS.

Corded Pique at 2½ cents per yard. This needs no comment.

5 CENTS.

A Lace Checked Bunting at 5 cents. Think of it! You never saw anything like it.

Unconditional Prices on Summer Silks!

They must be sold. Take heed of this and act accordingly.

Tempting prices quoted on Cashmere Shawls and Scarfs. Every shade you desire. Also Black Fichues with Silk Fringes and Embroidered corners. General reductions in Colored Rhadames and all kinds of Silk goods adapted for summer wear.

Trusting the public will avail themselves of our efforts to bring to Atlanta dry goods of superior grades and sell them as cheap as same goods are sold at in New York city and Boston.

All salesmen and saleslades in the house have strict instructions to show goods freely and politely whether customers wish to purchase or not.
